INTERSTATE BOARD TO ASK CONGRESS TO MAKE NEW HAVEN DISGORGE

Commission's Report Will Recommend Legislation Forcing Road to Sue Its Own Directors to Return Millions Looted From It

Stern Warning Coming That Exploitation of Innocent Stockholders Must Stop—Government to Aid Victims in Fight to Recover Their Losses

WASHINGTON, June 13.—The coming report of the Interstate Commerce Commission upon the investigation which it has recently been holding concerning the financing of the New Haven Railroad, under a resolution passed by Congress, will probably be one of the most important documents which was ever brought forth by any executive or administrative board in America.

THE INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION, IT IS UNDERSTOOD, WILL RECOMMEND TO CONGRESS THAT THE DIRECTORS OF THE NEW HAVEN RAILROAD, WHO HELD THEIR OFFICES WHILE THOSE ORGIES OF HIGH FINANCE OBTAINED, WHICH BROUGHT THAT ROAD, THE BOSTON & MAINE, THE NEW ENGLAND INVESTORS AND THE NEW ENGLAND TRAVELING PUBLIC TO THE VERGE OF FINANCIAL DISASTER, BE HELD PERSONALLY RESPONSIBLE FOR THE LOSSES WHICH THE RAILROADS HAVE SUFFERED BY THEIR ALLEGED MISCONDUCT.

Stern Warning to Looters.

This is of tremendous significance from three points of view.

It will be a notice to railroad directors and other trustees that when they wreck a railroad again they will have to deal not alone with the scattered and helpless thousands of stockholders whom they have plundered and who are helpless by reason of their very numbers, but will have to deal with society in its organized capacity, represented through its government officials; and that the government will lend its aid to the stockholders and to the community to recover, OUT OF THE PERSONAL ESTATE OF THE MISBEHAVING DIRECTORS, THOSE LOSSES WHICH THE RAILROAD SUFFERED AND, THROUGH THE RAILROAD, THE LOSSES WHICH THE STOCKHOLDERS AND THE PUBLIC SUFFERED.

It has been the law that directors of a corporation are the trustees for their stockholders; and since a railroad is a public service corporation, they are trustees also for the public. But the only relief which has been considered practicable under the law against misbehaving directors has been through a suit brought against them by the corporation itself. But since such a suit cannot be brought except by direction of the directors, that is not often a practical remedy and it generally happens that the suit against the directors must be brought—if brought at all—by the stockholders individually.

Immunity Through Cost of Suits.

The necessity of the individual stockholders—whose individual interest may be very small—entering a contest which would cost them personally hundreds of thousands of dollars has given the directors of these corporations practical immunity.

President Mellen, in his illuminating discussion in the Sunday AMERICAN of two weeks ago, pointed out this unfortunate situation and he also indicated a remedy. He said:

> One difficulty in which a minority stockholder finds himself when the railroad corporation, acting through its directors, is about to do something which the minority feels is wrong and would be prohibited by the courts is the question of expense of litigation. It is tremendously costly for private individuals to litigate with a great corporation, and minority stockholders know that the cost of such law suits would greatly exceed any prospective profits on their individual holdings.
> The minority stockholders ought to have a right, when they dissent on a question which touches the good faith of the directors concerning the vital interest of the corporation, and of the stockholders or any large group of stockholders, to ask the courts to compel the corporation to pay the expenses of an appeal to the courts, provided they satisfy the court that their pdima facie case is good and not frivolous and not brought in bad faith.

This is not an extraordinary proposition. If a wife today, under our law, sues her husband for separate support or divorce, she can ask, when the suit is filed, to have her husband compelled to pay the expenses of the suit against himself. This is obviously fair, for in so many cases the wife would be quite helpless with- such a right, and the stockholders in their relation to the corporations are just as helpless.

Personally Responsible

Congress has recognized this difficulty in the case of the New Haven Railroad, and passed a resolution directing the Interstate Commerce Commission to make an investigation which might be an aid to the stockholders because the greatest difficulty and cost of a stockholders' suit is the gathering of evidence necessary to win their case.

The Interstate Commerce Commission, through its attorney, Governor Folk, has investigated the conduct of these directors far enough to satisfy it that they are personally responsible for their actions, that is to say,

Forests Ablaze At Foothills of the White Mountains

Over a Thousand Acres Burned Flat Near Jackson, N. H.

JACKSON, N. H., June 13.—One of the worst forest fires in the history of this State is now raging at Rocky Brink near the White Mountains, close to Miller River. More than 300 men are engaged in battling the flames. A number of men suffering from burns were removed to nearby settlements for treatment. Up to midnight tonight 1,000 acres had been burned flat.

Recently the government took over 2,400 acres of land where the fire is raging for a reservation and designated two men to watch out for fires. They were settled in what is known as Camp No. 9. Last Thursday one of the men went out looking for fire and the other remained in camp to cook the evening meal. He left the camp for several minutes and when he returned the camp was afire.

10,000 Salvationists in London Meeting

Fifty-four Races Represented in Open-Air Gathering.

LONDON, June 13.—One of the most impressive open air religious gatherings London has ever seen took place in Hyde Park this afternoon and was participated in by 10,000 members of the Salvation Army, who are here from all parts of the world attending the International conference. All of the delegates were in uniform and there were sixty-five brass bands to furnish sacred music.

The American delegates made a considerable showing. In all fifty-four different races were represented.

Butler Ames to Wed a Missouri Belle

Ex-Congressman Butler Ames, grandson of Benjamin F. Butler, and one of the richest bachelors in Massachusetts, is to marry Miss Fifille Willis of Columbia, Mo., June 25. The ceremony will take place in Columbia.

This announcement caused great surprise in society in Boston and Lowell, it having been long taken for granted that Mr. Ames, who is forty-three years old, was a confirmed bachelor.

Butler Ames is a West Point graduate, entered the Spanish-American war with the title of lieutenant-colonel, and came out with the title of colonel. He is the son of Adelbert Ames, a Civil War veteran, who married the daughter of General Butler. It was once reported that he was a suitor for the hand of Alice Roosevelt.

Rich Briton Is Bay State Boy

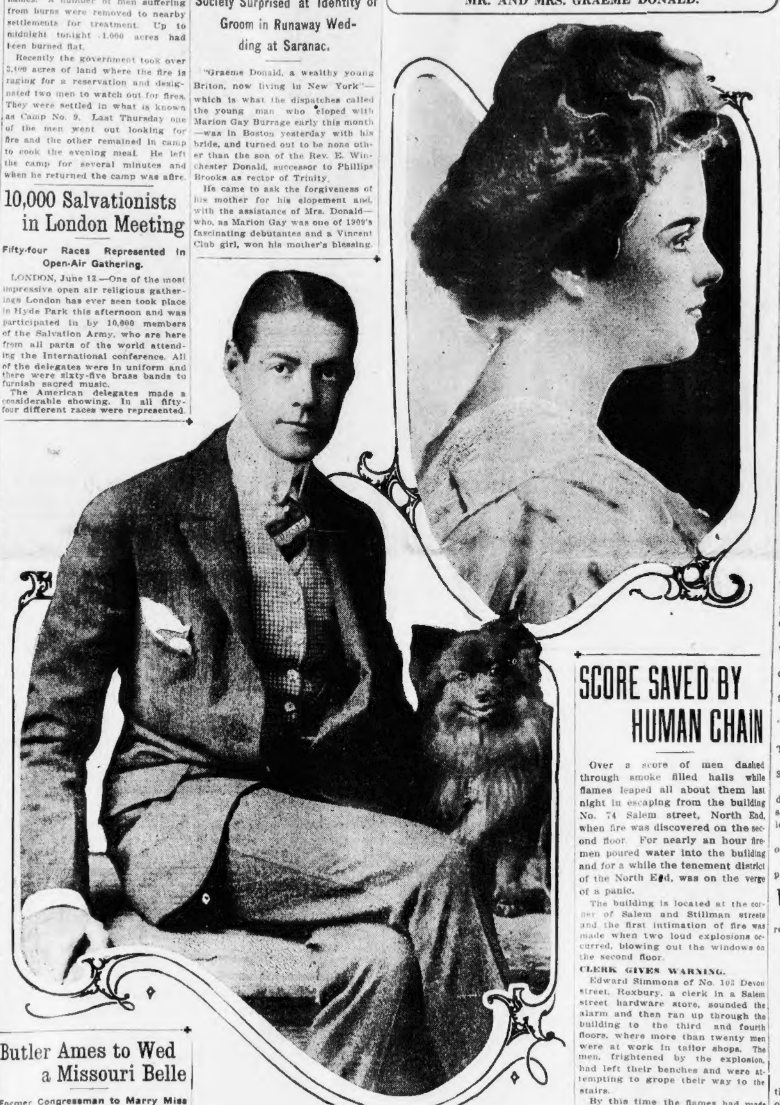
Donald, Son of Trinity Rector

Elopers Here for Maternal Blessing

Society Surprised at Identity of Groom in Runaway Wedding at Saranac.

"Graeme Donald, a wealthy young Briton, now living in New York"—which is what the dispatches called the young man who eloped with Marion Gay Burrage early this month—was in Boston yesterday with his bride, and turned out to be none other than the son of the Rev. E. Winchester Donald, successor to Phillips Brooks as rector of Trinity.

He came to ask the forgiveness of his mother for his elopement and, with the assistance of Mrs. Donald—who, as Marion Gay was one of 1909's fascinating debutantes and a Vincent Club girl, won his mother's blessing.



MR. AND MRS. GRAEME DONALD.

The three lunched together at the Lenox yesterday. Mrs. Donald is living at No. 89 Mt. Vernon street. The marriage was a complete surprise to the elder Mrs. Donald, but she bestowed her blessing upon the couple.

When the dispatches from Saranac Lake on the morning of June 4 brought the news of Marion Gay Burrage's wedding to Graeme Donald, no one thought of connecting the name with the son of Trinity's former rector. In the first place, the dispatches all spoke of him as "A wealthy young Briton," added that he was "studying as an artist in New York" and amplified this description by saying that he came of a "family of wealth and social position in London."

BAY STATE BOY.

An AMERICAN reporter met Mr. Donald with his mother and his bride at the Lenox yesterday.

"So you're the Graeme Donald, are

Evelyn Thaw Plans a Divorce in Paris

"I Shall Enjoy Myself From Now On,' She Declares.

PARIS, June 13.—Mrs. Evelyn Nesbit Thaw declares she has made up her mind to establish a residence here with the intention of obtaining a divorce. The ease with which Mrs. Clarence H. Mackay and other American women have untied the marital knot in the French courts inspirel her to follow their example. "I am sick of the name of Thaw," declared the young woman, who once was the central figure in America's most noted murder trial. I want to disassociate myself from it for ever. I might marry again, though I think a single girl can have the better time. I am determined to enjoy myself from now on."

Looking as pretty and childlike as ever, Mrs. Thaw is having a merry time now. Her impromptu tangos and hesitation with Jack Clifford at fashionable restaurants are creating a furore.

SCORE SAVED BY HUMAN CHAIN

Over a score of men dashed through smoke filled halls while flames leaped all about them last night in escaping from the building No. 74 Salem street, North End, when fire was discovered on the second floor. For nearly an hour firemen poured water into the building and for a while the tenement district of the North End, was on the verge of a panic.

The building is located at the corner of Salem and Stillman streets and the first intimation of fire was made when two loud explosions occurred, blowing out the windows on the second floor.

CLERK GIVES WARNING.

Edward Simmons of No. 103 Devon street, Roxbury, a clerk in a Salem street hardware store, sounded the alarm and then ran up through the building to the third and fourth floors, where more than twenty men were at work in tailor shops. The men, frightened by the explosion, had left their benches and were attempting to grope their way to the stairs.

By this time the flames had made great headway, and when Simmons returned to rescue the men on the fourth floor he had much difficulty in locating the stairway.

Again forming a human chain, this time, however, it was through both flames and smoke. Simmons led the men to the street. Believing that others were still in the building he started on another trip, but fell at the top of the first flight and slid to the street floor, cut and exhausted.

The fire started on the second floor in the establishment of Rubinson Company, ladies' tailors, and spread up through to the third, occupied by A. Markus, pant makers. The fourth floor is occupied by the New England Overall Company and the fifth by L. Schlar, coat maker.

INVESTIGATE CAUSE.

The firemen experienced much difficulty in reaching the burning building. Traffic was at its height and the narrow streets in the market district were crowded with Saturday night shoppers, pushcarts and wagons of every description. Salem street is also narrow, and with scores of children playing in the streets the drivers of the fire apparatus drove their horses almost at a walk.

THREATEN CRIMINAL ACTION AGAINST THE DEFUNCT GAY FIRM

Clamoring Creditors of Concern, One of the Members of Which Was Expelled from the Stock Exchange Charge Certain Collateral Tendered for Stock Is Missing—Demand Accounting

Gay Has Been Ill Two Years; Mistakes Blamed on Subordinates; "Tom" Lawson Among "Unsecured Creditors"—Allegations of Amazing 'Frenzied Finance" in State Street House

An amazing story of high finance—how the "big game" was played right in the heart of State street—has come to light as a result of the failure of the banking and brokerage firm of Gay & Sturgis and the expulsion of Harry H. Gay, senior member of the firm, from the Boston Stock Exchange.

So astounding are the charges made by creditors of the concern that plans are being made to bring the matter to the attention of District Attorney Pelletier, it was announced last night.

Gay & Sturgis failed for $1,867,613.73.

The UNSECURED liabilities amount to more than a million and a quarter dollars.

Creditors declare that they stand to lose the greater part of this—possibly a million, or even more.

These same creditors say they do not intend to lose until they have seen the law go the limit in the case.

The creditors say they want to know what became of the firm's funds.

Asks, Where Is Collateral?

Courtenay C. Douglas, whose claim against the bankrupt concern is for $6,000, charges that $10,000 worth of stock he deposited with the firm as collateral is unaccounted for.

Douglas, through his counsel, says he is determined to find out what became of this stock.

Dr. George F. McInnes, a Cambridge dentist, claims that he bought a block of copper stock through the firm, and that he is unable to discover any such stock credited to his name.

Through his attorney, Dr. McInnes declares he intends to find out what became of his money or the stock it was supposed to purchase.

Counsel for both Douglas and Dr. McInnes say they may go to the district attorney for action.

Other charges are brought by still other creditors of the bankrupt firm.

By an unusual coincidence, Thomas W. Lawson, who coined the term "frenzied finance," is among the Gay & Sturgis creditors.

Lawson's claim is for $25,000. This is for money he loaned them. The note he received in return is listed as "unsecured," it is said.

This brings Lawson's claim in line with the UNSECURED $1,223,-865.02 due to customers on account of credit balances and margin equities.

Of these creditors there are 450. These include all classes and conditions of people—some rich but most of them poor; some among them servants, and many already financially suffering, they say, because of their losses.

All these creditors stand to lose 95 cents on the dollar, according to one attorney in the case. Or, to put it the way the lawyer did:

"The firm's assets are for the most part of uncertain value and will probably not exceed five cents on the dollar."

Value of Firm's Assets

Frederick B. Greenhalge, assignee when the firm failed and now co-receiver with Lewis J. Farmer of Boston, in a notice to the creditors, says:

> The value of assets under the items of "due from customers" and "notes receivable"—$451,956.29 and $10,386.04, respectively—is PROBLEMATICAL.
>
> The value of $29,722.12 due the firm from mining companies has not been appraised or determined, and figures given represent merely the cash outlay.
>
> The apparent value of the firm's equity in the (astonishing) sum of $780,472, representing total assets pledged or held as security, WILL IN ALL PROBABILITY BE CONSIDERABLY DECREASED, as much of the collateral was sold at the low prices which ruled during the few days following the assignment.

The creditors declare that in view of these things, the outlook for themselves is not the brightest. But they say they will not give up without a fight.

They pointed out last night that certain banks were secured creditors to the extent of about $500,000. They claimed these banks held securities to the value of half a million "DEPOSITED WITH THE BANKS BY GAY & STURGIS TO COVER LOANS."

One lawyer in the case said this collateral was held by the banks at the time of the assignment last April 21.

The disclosures alleged in the charges by creditors was followed by the inside details of why Harry H. Gay, bonny good fellow, popular society and club man, was "disgraced" by being expelled by the board of managers of the Stock Exchange—a fate which in all the years of the Exchange has meted out to but four other men.

Gay, who is now at Saranac Lake, N. Y., yesterday refused to discuss the bankruptcy or his own expulsion from the Stock Exchange.

The other members of the defunct firm were Irving J. Sturgis and R. Linzee Hall, both of Boston.

Hall Declines to Reply.

Hall was asked:

"Have you any statement to make in reply to the charges of various creditors who allege that the firm of Gay & Sturgis disposed of stock belonging to customers and pocketed the cash received for such collateral? We want to give you the opportunity to deny these insinuations."

Hall replied:

> There is much to be said on both sides of the question. I don't care to make any statement. You had better see Mr. Charles S. Baxter, who represents us in this matter.

Sturgis was asked:

"Various creditors of the firm of Gay & Sturgis tell us that stock which they believed to have been purchased and which they supposed was standing to their credit on your books cannot be found. Hence they allege that their holdings have been disposed of and the proceeds unlawfully withheld from them by your firm. They say that they are determined to lay the matter before the district attorney, and intimate that criminal action will be begun in case sufficient grounds can be found for such procedure. Can you not make some statement to the press in view of the seriousness of the charges? We do not want to print only the creditors' side of the affair."

Sturgis answered:

> I have heard a lot about that phase of the affair. People who lose money in stocks are naturally bitter against the stock broker and are inclined to believe all sorts of things. However, I do not want any publicity in the matter, and do not care to be quoted in any particular. Since you request it, however, I will talk the matter over with Mr. Baxter, our attorney, and some statement may be forthcoming in the course of the day.

Attorney Baxter refused to discuss the matter.

Last night this statement was made on behalf of the bankrupt concern:

> The people from whom most of the talk of criminal action has come are those who have ordinary, open, running accounts and who have no legal claim against Gay & Sturgis other than that of simple creditors.

H. LeV. Sampson of the firm of Hutchins & Wheeler, counsel for Harry H. Gay, said:

> In the facts as I know them, I should not suppose that any criminal action would lie against Mr. Gay. Whatever was done, I understand was done in Mr. Gay's absence on account of illness. And his being expelled from the stock exchange was, I believe, owing to the rules of the exchange which hold a members liable for the acts of his employes.
>
> The rules of the stock exchange expressly forbid a member to transact any business after becoming insolvent. In this particular the stock exchange is much more stringent than the civil statutes, which contain no such restriction. Mr. Gay is to be pitied, rather than blamed, on account of this most unfortunate affair.

QUESTIONS WHETHER THE FIRM EVER BOUGHT STOCK AS ORDERED

The first creditor to act following the firm's assignment was Dr. McInnes, the Cambridge dentist. His counsel is Attorney Ammidon of Bicknell & Ammidon.

According to Mr. Ammidon, Dr. McInnes purchased a block of Isle Royale copper stock from the Gay & Sturgis Company. This stock was held by Gay & Sturgis on a running account, and the dividends paid to Dr. McInnes at stated intervals, it was explained.

When the company assigned on April 21, Dr. McInnes attempted to secure his Isle Royale stock, but was unable to locate any stock of that name standing to his credit in the possession of the tottering concern, according to his lawyer.

Attorney Ammidon said:

"We are wondering if there ever was any Isle Royal stock purchased with Dr. McInnes' money. If so, we have been wholly unable to find any. In case our suspicions can be upheld by later developments I am of the opinion that the Gay & Sturgis case is a proper field for action on the part of the District Attorney."

Attorney Thomas J. Barry, representing Courtenay C. Douglas, said:

"Mr. Douglas deposited $10,000 worth of Superior stock as collateral for a purchase of $4,000 worth of Houlton copper stock. He received his $4,000 worth of Houlton all right, but never saw his $10,000 worth of Superior stock. Hence he is a claimant for the difference, or $6,000.

"We are determined to find out what became of our Superior stock. If what I surmise proves to be true, I shall have no hesitancy in placing all the facts in my possession before the District Attorney. It looks to me as if here was a case that demands action. On the other hand, people are partly to blame who place unbounded confidence in stock brokers and entrust them with all their eathly possessions. The stock broker is only human, after all."

WEST END MAN CLAIMS $1,200 IS DUE HIM FROM DEFUNCT CONCERN

Peter Callahan of No. 39 North Russell street, West End, claims $1,200 is due him from the defunct concern. He claims to have paid Gay & Sturgis $150 only two days before the crash came.

Another creditor for a small amount was found at the banking rooms of Gay & Sturgis looking for his lost stock. He refused to give his name, but said:

"I bought some copper stock in 1910, and, as I had no safe place to keep it, I allowed it to remain in the care of Gay & Sturgis, who I thought could care for it better than I could.

"I called regularly for my dividends, which were always paid me at the rate of 3 per cent. I received ten dividends in all. When I called to get my dividends the other day, they told me that there was none, and that they didn't know what stock it was I owned."

One attorney interested in the case had this to say:

"In a stock deal, a broker generally buys enough of a certain kind of stock to 'cover' his orders, and the stock so purchased may be in a block belonging to several different perpersons. In large brokerage houses a customer with a running account is seldom credited with certificates of a particular number. Therefore a creditor of Gay & Sturgis would have an exceedingly hard time to prove that any collateral now in the possession of some bank originally belonged to him.

"I shouldn't wonder if some individuals who have lost heavily in the Gay & Sturgis deal would resort to criminal action to have somebody punished for their losses. But of their being successful, I have my doubts. Anyone can have anybody arrested, and anyone can have suit brought against anyone else for anything under the sun. But to get redress and prove anything is a very different matter."

Receiver Farmer said yesterday it would be about six weeks before the receivers will have finished their work. He added:

"It is a very delicate matter to print much about this affair until the receivers have made their report to the court. Whatever you say, you say at your peril. It will be some six weeks yet before we can make a report to the courts. We have a pile of securities nearly five feet high which we are attempting to appraise so as to find out where we are at. It is impossible for us to say anything definite if we would, and we wouldn't if we could at this stage."

District Attorney Pelletier was asked about the case. He said:

"No one has approached me in the matter so far. People who buy stock on margin have no real title to the same as with other property, and it is almost impossible to convict a stockbroker of larceny. It is entirely within their power to dispose of their customers' collateral when, in their judgement the situation demands it. In fact, that provision is expressly stipulated in the contract between the broker and his client.

"Brokers' contracts are very broad, and permit them to be downright dishonest if they choose to be without violating any law. You would have hard work to prove embezzlement in the marketing of securities deposited by customers, as the fluctuating stock market can be advanced as a good reason for the sale of customers' collateral. It is bound to be a confused and intricate tangle.

"I stand ready to do my duty if the occasion demands it. However, until the receivers have made their report, I do not expect to be called upon to take any action. It lies with them.

"If the receivers find anything remiss in the operations of the affairs of Gay & Sturgis, they will so report to the court. Then, and not until then, is there any likelihood of my taking a hand in the case."

Of the expulsion of Gay officials of the Boston Stock Exchange were reluctant to speak. Some of the officials expressed sympathy for Gay, who, they said, is now trying to recover his health at the Saranac Lake resort. One member of the board of managers of the Exchange said:

"Mr. Gay is a sick man, and has been afflicted with tuberculosis for nearly two years. This necessitated his neglecting his business and made it possible for grave mistakes to be committed in his absence. I do not think that he, personally, was to blame so much as people under him

U. S. PLANS COMMISSION TO GOVERN MEXICANS

Would Place Warring Republic Under Remarkable Form of Government Pending Election of New President Submitted

By LAURENCE TOD,
Special Staff Correspondence of the American.

MEDIATION HEADQUARTERS, Niagara Falls, Ont., June 13.—A suggestion that Mexico may be placed under a commission form of government of President and cabinet, pending the election of a new President and Congress, was given by Justice Lamar of the American delegation today at the close of a long conference with the A. B. C. mediators.

Justice Lamar stated that the morning had been spent in discussion of the form which the provisional government should take; whether it should be "A provisional president, a president and cabinet, or a commission."

This is understood to be the meaning of Secretary Bryan's statement in Washington that a way had been found to avoid recognition of the position of President Huerta as provisional president.

PROCLAIMED BY ALL.

If a commission is created the commission can be proclaimed to be the provisional executive of Mexico by the Huertaistas, the Constitutionalists and other factions at the same time. All can claim it as the legal successor to the power which they severally can give up. Secretary Bryan is believed to have communicated the plans to the American delegates within the past thirty-six hours and they have presented it to the mediators.

At the close of a session of the American delegates with the mediators Justice Lamar announced:

"We have discussed the second plank in the protocol, but will not reach an agreement. This plank is primarily one of organization, but it includes both organization and personnel.

"The first part of it has to do with the frame work of the government to be established in Mexico, whether there shall be a provisional President, a President and a cabinet or a commission.

"As we have not decided upon how the government itself shall be composed, it follows that we have not gone beyond that point and decided the personnel. Until we have agreed upon the form of government is to take, we shall not try to agree upon its composition."

TO PROCEED WITH PROTOCOL.

Today's developments indicate that the American delegates are determined to go ahead with the protocol without any further reference as to how the new government shall come into power. The next steps in this program are the following:

1. That the provisional government, or commission, shall consist of a provisional president and four provisional cabinet officers, whose power shall be restricted to the duties of maintaining peace and preparing for a national election, after which the provisional government will turn over its authority to permanent officials.

2. That the United States will recognize the provisional president chosen by the mediators and co-operate with him in carrying out the provisions of the protocol so far as it is possible through diplomatic channels.

Although they have not expressed it officially the Mexicans are agreed that if the protocol is drawn up the way that President Wilson and Secretary Bryan want it Carranza could continue his march on Mexico City, capture it, and with the provisional government in the hands of his agents, enter the presidential election with no one to oppose him.

The reports that General Villa is already planning Carranza's downfall and is secretly plotting to seize control of Mexico, is not believed by Secretary Bryan or the American delegates. The American delegates are unalterably opposed to Villa as a candidate for a political office.

RUMOR FEDERALS ORDER U. S. TROOPS TO QUIT OUTPOSTS

By CHARLES MICHELSON.

VERA CRUZ, June 13.—The report brought by a scared milkman who came from Medillin, a mile beyond the American outposts, to Tejara, that the Federals had ordered a suspension of all traffic with the American lines, had grown tonight into a story that the Federals had notified Major Russell he must evacuate the water works outpost by tomorrow night. The alternative is that he will be attacked by 3,500 Federals.

Rumor has it that the Federals said Huerta had lost his nerve and was yielding to the Americans in the mediation proceedings. Therefore, they will not pay any attention from now on to the protocols issued by General Blanquet, Garcia Pena and Portillo y Rojas, the triumvirate at the head of the Mexican affairs.

CARRANZA AGAIN PUTS MEDIATION IN DANGER

Representative of the Rebels Informs Bryan That Delegates Must Have Full Participation at Niagara Conference

WASHINGTON, June 13.—Following a conference that Charles A. Douglas, the legal representative of the Constitutionalists, had with Secretary of State Bryan today, it was learned at the department that General Carranza made clear to the administration that under no circumstances would he consent to send delegates to Niagara who would only participate informally in the discussions held there.

Carranza will not send the three envoys, named in his note to the mediators received by them in Niagara today, unless the mediators transmit word to him either directly or indirectly that his representatives will be formally received without the Constitutionalists declaring an armistice as heretofore demanded by the mediators.

Neither the administration nor the Constitutionalists expect the mediators to withdraw from their original stand that cessation of hosilities on the part of the rebels must be a condition precedent to admittance to the parley. The only hope for the Carranza representatives to be admitted to the mediation conferences on their own terms rests with the Huerta envoys.

WON'T STOP FIGHTING.

It is reported that Secretary Bryan is sanguine that the Federal representatives are so eager to have the Constitutionalists represented at Niagara that they will make overtures to the mediators to revoke the condition.

It is said at the department that Mr. Douglas also informed Mr. Bryan that if the Constitutionalists are not allowed a voice at Niagara they will consider themselves in no way bound by any action that may be taken there and will not abandon their war campaign until Mexico City is taken and Huerta driven from power.

General Carranza authorized his local representative to convey to the State Department his appreciation of the friendliness it has shown the Rebel cause and to inform it that it was entirely out of courtesy to this country that he had ever given mediation any serious consideration.

But he pointedly made definite that his friendship for the administration would not carry him to the length of recognizing any plan for the establishment of a provisional government in Mexico except that which called for the unconditional abdication of Huerta and the appointment of an active Constitutionalist who would take the reins of government as a successor of Madero and not Huerta.

The latter, it was declared, could be brought about by Pedro Lascurain, who was secretary of foreign affairs under Madero, resuming his old office, becoming temporary President upon the abdication of Huerta, and in turn resigning after appointing a Carranzaist foreign secretary who would thereupon become provisional President.

JAP WARSHIPS TO LEAVE.

The reception of this information by the administration has caused it to lose much of its buoyant hope in regard to the successful outcome of the mediation conference, and has resulted in its directing the American delegates at Niagara Falls to use every effort with both the mediators and the Huerta envoys to have them consent to allowing the Constitutionalist envoys to come in without agreeing to an armistice.

Admiral Howard, commanding the Pacific fleet, has reported that Captain Moriyama of the Japanese cruiser Idzumo has notified him that it is no longer necessary for a Japanese warship to remain in Mexican waters.

Moriyama has issued credentials to the Japanese residing at Mazatlan, and should it be necessary they will be given asylum on American warships.

General Funston has been cabled by acting Secretary of War Breckenridge to make a full report on the food situation in Vera Cruz and to offer remedial suggestions.

This message was sent to General Funston after a conference today between Secretary Breckenridge, Secretary of Commerce Redfield, Quartermaster-General J. B. Aleshire and Judge Advocate-General Enoch Crowder.

It is expected that General Funston will adopt the plan of having foodstuffs sent to Vera Cruz on United States transports for sale to the merchants at cost prices.

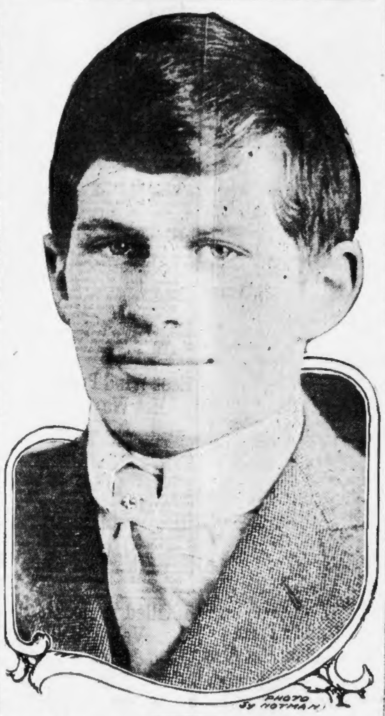
Sidis, 16, Harvard Graduate

Holds College Age Record

Boy a Mathematical Wonder

WILLIAM J. SIDIS, PRODIGY AT HARVARD



In his recently-acquired long trousers William J. Sidis will be graduated from Harvard College this week at the record age of sixteen—the youngest Harvard graduate since the venerable institution was founded.

Sidis is the mathematical wonder who gives lectures on the Fourth Dimension and who chatters familiarly of trigonometry and differential calculus and such.

But the fact that the Braves yesterday won their fourth straight game means nothing to William J.

He doesn't care anything about baseball. He doesn't know anything about it. He doesn't give the "nth" part of a minus sign for it.

Ask any "kid" what a diamond is.

Kid gives you the "once over" suspiciously and says: "A dimun's ter play baseball on er co'se an'—say wotta t'ink I am, a dead one?"

Ask William J. Sidis what a diamond is. With alertness—that quality so dear to President Emeritus Eliot—William J. will reply:

THE TY COBB IN HIS LEAGUE.

But, even as he answers, Sidis will wonder why any human being should ask such a simple question. Because to him a plane diamond is, in the "a b c" of life, too simple to be explained, just like the baseball diamond to the average boy.

In spite of his youth Sidis is a year late in being graduated, because the Harvard authorities solemnly decreed last year that he was too young to take his degree. He was "fit," as far as his studies went. This year he will be graduated by special vote of the faculty. Seeing that he is sixteen, it seems a shame to hold him back any longer.

In the "Mathematical League" Sidis is a young Ty Cobb. He bats .400, so as to speak. He has an intuitive understanding, a marvelous grasp of the science of figures, mathematical and geometrical, that is almost uncanny.

His is no mere parrot-like repeating, but a sure and wonderful knowledge of the subject which enables him to discuss advanced problems at equal terms with gray-haired professors.

He has worked out problems in geometry which, he maintains, will help revolutionize the study of that science. His brain, in that direction, is years in advance of his body.

Of late Sidis has shown a tendency to write verse. He is a quiet, reserved lad, and one may be sure, he does not rush about spouting from his own compositions of a metrical nature.

His verse is not on scientific subjects, but, it is reported, deals with matters of sentiment.

It is considered remarkable by Sidis' friends that his poetry should take such a fanciful turn, but no more remarkable, they admit, than the fact that he indulges in poetry at all.

Sidis is the son of Dr. Boris Sidis, formerly a lecturer at Harvard. His home is at No. 83 Brattle street, not far from the college. He comes and goes between home and college with clocklike regularity.

He nods pleasantly to his fellow-collegians and says "Good morning" and "Good evening" and such salutations. But that is about all.

MATHEMATICAL GENIUS.

Sidis is essentially a mathematical genius. In the general academic courses he achieved only average rating. But he easily led his classes in "math" all through the college course.

When he entered Harvard five years ago Sidis was truly juvenile in a blue Norfolk suit, broad white collar and Windsor tie. This was his style of dress for two years.

He wore "knickers" until recently, when he was graduated into long trousers, the more fitting attire, maybe, in which to be graduated into his Bachelor of Arts.

What to Do for Baby in This Hot Weather

A Brooks' Baby Barley Baby

There is much you can do to safeguard your baby's health.

Give him a bath in his tub every morning, and a light sponge bath two or three times a day.

Dress him in thin clothing, and change him promptly.

Keep him out of the sun, and whether in doors or out, protect him from flies and mosquitoes.

Be sure that the milk you use for his food is pure and sweet.

You can keep milk sweet for many hours by standing a bottle of it upside down in a pail of cool water if your ice unexpectedly runs low.

If the milk has turned ever so slightly, vomiting or looseness may appear. Take away all the milk and give Brooks' Baby Barley water alone temporarily. This should be given quite cold in small amounts at frequent intervals.

The return to milk may be made as soon as the trouble disappears.

Modify the milk with milk sugar and barley water prepared from Brooks' Baby Barley. Milk so modified digests easily, nourishes, and keeps the bowels regular.

If you would have best results, be sure to use Brooks' Baby Barley and no other. It is made from the choicest barley and is especially prepared for infant feeding.

Do not overfeed.

Keep him as quiet as possible.

Brooks' Baby Barley may be had of every druggist at 25c per package.

SCHUMANN-HEINK TELLS OF HER PLANS

CHILDREN PROVIDED FOR

PATERSON, N. J., June 13.—Unruffled in spirit, Madame Ernestine Schumann Heink sat in the oak library at her home in the New Jersey hills at Little Falls today fresh from her divorce triumph in Chicago. "It's all in the past now," said she. "I don't want to talk of it. But I cannot help feeling grateful that the miserable effort to smirch my name utterly failed.

"The future? Why I'll live on for my children and for my art.

"In my earlier days as an opera singer, it was thirty-six years ago, I deprived myself of much, as any mother would, for the children. In Hamburg I had scarcely enough to keep us going. I had to sell the little jewels I had, yes, the blankets from my bed to get food for them. I wonder if people know that?

HAS MADE HER WILL.

"Now in the heyday of my success I'm going to keep on, for my children's sake.

"Oh, I don't need to think about the money," the diva went on with a smile. "Really I am a wealthy woman and I'll leave something to the kiddies when I go.

"And they're already provided for," Madame Schumann-Heink confided. "Before I left Chicago, I made out my will, making Elias Mayer and Sidney Stein, my lawyers, trustees of my estate to keep it for my children and grandchildren until the last child has become of age.

"That reminds me, too, that another grandchild has come along. My son, Hans, who runs my orange groves for me in California, has another little girl, born last Sunday. That's the seventh grandchild. Isn't that doing fairly well for a mother of eight children?"

TRIED TO MAKE HOME HAPPY.

"I've always tried to make my home happy," she said with quavering voice. "My children know that.

"My first marriage was unhappy. My marriage to Mr. Schumann was happy. He was an actor and understood me. When he died I felt that I could never be happy again. But my children buoyed me up. And now this last event has come into my life and has gone out again.

"If I could not make my husband think I loved him, that I was as devoted as he thought I ought to be, it must have been that my passion for my art made him feel so. I do not know. I won't think of it. I tried to make the home a joy for all.

"It may be asked if I am heartbroken over this. Heartbroken? No, decidedly no. I am thinking of the future and all it holds for mf children and for me. That's what keeps me up.

"I'm to go on singing for years if my voice will let me, and they tell me it is stronger and better now than it ever was before. Do you know that tomorrow makes me fifty-three years in this little world."

Madame Schumann Heink had no word to say of Mrs. Katherine Dean, correspondent in the divorce suit.

"I've made up my mind to forget all about it," she said.

She sings a new ballad by Siegfried Wagner at the Bayreuth opera festival on August 20. The King of Bavaria will attend the performance.

LINEMAN CUTTING WIRES KILLED ON POLE AT ROCKLAND

ROCKLAND, June 13.—Frank Cook, a lineman employed by the electric light company, was killed this afternoon while attempting to cut some high tension wires on a pole at the corner of Union and Webster streets. More than 2,300 volts passed through his body.

Cook, with a gang of telephone, railroad and electric light men, was cutting the wires along Union street, so that the Gleason School, which was being moved through the main street, from School street to North Union, could pass.

There were two other men on the pole beside Cook who was at the top. At a signal from the foreman Cook attempted to cut the wires from which the power had not been shut off. When his pliers came in contact with the wire he was seen to fall back.

The other two men rushed to his aid and rushed him down the pole on their backs. He was dead when they reached the ground. Cook was thirty-three years old and lived in Whitman.

The schoolhouse, which was being moved, was the old Gleason School and had not been used for some time. The town recently voted to move it from its old location to the lot selected for the erection of a new school. The building was safely moved after the excitement resulting from the electrification of Cook had subsided.

HELD ON CHARGE OF ASSAULT ON YOUNG NEWSBOY

Pawtucket Man Must Answer in Higher Court; Gives $400 Bonds.

PAWTUCKET, R. I., June 13.—Charged with assaults on Abraham Feital, a newsboy, and Eben W. Sears, Jr., Michael Moy, a Main street newsdealer, pleaded not guilty before Judge Tuck in District Court today and was held in $200 on each count for trial June 26. Bonds were furnished by Henry Lynd.

It is alleged that the boy was passing Moy's store with a cart loaded with newspapers, when Moy overturned the cart and threw the papers into the street. Sears attempted to intercede for the boy and, it is alleged, Moy assauled him.

The Feital boy is a brother to the one-legged newsboy who charged Patrolman Samuel Wightman with assaulting him about six weeks ago.

BIG CREDITORS OF FAILED STOCK-BROKING CONCERN

Here are some of the creditors for large amounts who lost money in the failure of the stock broking firm of Gay & Sturgis:

Thomas W. Lawson	$25,000
Mrs. Katherine G. Sturgis, wife of Irving J. Sturgis of the defunct firm	283,000
Preston S. Lincoln of Worcester	98,000
Courtenay C. Douglas	6,000
R. R. Goodell, Sturgis' father-in-law, large creditor	Exact amount unknown

for whose actions he was of course responsible.

"Just what took place I am unwilling to state, but everybody knows how easy it is to take other people's money with the best of intentions about returning it, and then gradually become involved to such an extent that one does not realize the gravity of the situation until he is called upon to make good the loss.

"I do not believe it was thought for an instant that what was done was incompatible with sound business. It came about so gradually that before anybody probably knew it they were in up to their necks."

Another member of the Board of Managers said:

"Expelling Mr. Gay from the Boston Stock Exchange was the most distasteful act of my whole career. It was the hardest thing that I was ever called upon to do. I knew Mr. Gay well, and everybody liked him as a brother.

"But our duty was strictly set out for us in the Constitution and Rules of the Stock Exchange. We had no alternative in the matter. It was simply vote Mr. Gay out or defy the constitution which plainly provided that a member who was found guilty of practice inimical to the proper conduct of the Exchange should be forthwith expelled.

"I am sorry for Gay and for others who are suffering as a result of the bankruptcy of the firm which he represented. Could he have stuck closer to business, which was prevented by his poor health, things might have been different."

Growing out of the Gay & Sturgis bankruptcy comes a clash between counsel connected with different interests in the case. Ammidon & Bicknell, counsel for some of the creditors of the firm, have written the creditors a letter in which the law firm of Swift, Friedman & Atherton is named. This letter follows:

"To the Creditors of Gay & Sturgis:

"Owing to a serious and most unusual situation which has arisen in the bankruptcy case of Gay & Sturgis, bankers and brokers, of Boston, we are writing, as the attorneys for the petitioning creditors, to request your co-operation in the bankruptcy proceedings now pending against the firm. The situation in brief is this:

"On the 21st day of April, Gay & Sturgis made a general assignment for the benefit of their creditors. As assignee, they selected Frederic B. Greenhalge, Esq., a Boston attorney and an office associate of the firm of Currier, Rollins, Young & Pillsbury, who have acted as counsel for Gay & Sturgis in several important matters. Mr. Greenhalge in turn retained counsel, selecting Messrs. Swift, Friedman & Atherton, of Boston.

"From April 21st to May 22d, Mr. Greenhalge continued as assignee in and actual possession of the estate of the bankrupt firm. During that time attempts were made by ourselves as well as by other attorneys representing creditors of the firm, to procure information as to the whereabouts of stock claimed as the property of our clients. This information was not forthcoming.

"On May 22, feeling that the interests of our clients and the other creditors of the estate demanded administration of the assets by the Courts of the United States, rather than by the personal selection of the bankrupts themselves, we filed a petition of involuntary bankruptcy. With this petition we filed an application for the appointment of a receiver, in order as soon as possible to place the estate in the hands of a sworn official of the court. As a result of this petition, which was supported by attorneys for other creditors with claims aggregating some seven thousand dollars, receivers were appointed on May 29 to take charge of the assets of Gay & Sturgis. They will continue in office until the election of a trustee in bankruptcy.

DECLARES IT IS ESSENTIAL THAT ALL CREDITORS ACT IN UNISON

"On May 22, supported by attorneys for other creditors, we made a demand upon the assignee for a list of the creditors of the firm. This demand was accompanied by an offer to pay any expense entailed thereby, but the assignee emphatically refused to give this list. That same night, counsel for the assignee, Messrs. Swift, Friedman & Atherton, sent to each of the creditors a circular letter requesting that they be chosen as attorneys for the creditors in the bankruptcy proceedings. The list of creditors to whom they sent this letter was the selfsame list that was refused us. We only yesterday obtained this list, and then by order of the United States Court.

"We believe that the action of the counsel for the assignee in sending out this circular letter and in denying us access to the list of creditors was most unfair, and that the relations between these counsel and the bankrupts are too friendly. We do not know if Messrs. Gay & Sturgis have anything to conceal, but we do feel assured that if there is anything to be concealed it will not be brought to light if the estate is administered by those friendly to Messrs. Gay & Sturgis.

"We are accordingly writing to request that you should fill out and sign the enclosed proof of claim, affixing thereto a statement of your account, swear to it before a notary public and return to us.

"You will note also the power of attorney on the reverse side of the proof of claim, which should likewise be signed and sworn to. This power of attorney is drawn in such a way as expressly to revoke any power of attorney that may have already been signed by you, so that if you have, under the misapprehension as to the facts, signed such a power of attorney, the execution of the enclosed form will revoke the preceding power.

"The trustee in bankruptcy is chosen by the votes of the majority of the creditors, so that it is absolutely essential, if a trustee who will act impartially and not in the interests of the bankrupts is to be chosen, that the creditors should act in unison in this matter.

"We should also be glad to receive any details that you may have as to the course of your dealings with this firm. We should like particularly to know if you have any receipts or other documents signed by them in which they profess to hold specific shares of stock as your property. We have set out to make a full, fair and free investigation of the conduct of the business of this firm, and in order to do this we must have the cooperation of all the creditors."

"Very truly yours,

"AMMIDON & BICKNELL."

Attorney Friedman was asked about the letter yesterday. He replied:

"I have no reply to make to Ammidon & Bicknell's letter. It is the work of very young lawyers, who have no knowledge of the brokerage business.

"The banking firm was one of Boston's leading banking and brokerage houses. It was regarded as one of the soundest houses in the East. The business was organized by Harry H. Gay in 1896 as Stackpole & Gay. In 1902 it was reorganized as Gay & Sturgis. Sturgis is a member of the New York Stock Exchange. Gay was formerly vice-president of the Boston Stock Exchange. He was admitted to the exchange on December 28, 1887."

Gay & Sturgis maintained one of the two private wires from Boston to the Lake Superior district. They had branch offices at Duluth and in the Superior mining region.

One of the members of the firm when asked at the time of the assignment to tell something about it, summed it up in one terse sentence:

"We're all ruined."

Prison Stops Thefts by Ethel Kimball

◆

Ten Times Arrested in the Past 10 Years

◆

Early Luxury Paved Way for Girl's Ruin

Petted and Pampered, She Descended to Crime to Get Money

JUNE 21, 1904—Forgery and uttering. Probation.

JULY, 1909—As Alice Champlin; larceny. Two months at Deer Island.

JULY 29, 1910—Larceny; fined $10; unable to pay, committed.

JULY 30, 1910—Idle and disorderly. Six months in the House of Correction.

FEBRUARY 17, 1911—Larceny. Probation, later surrendered and sentenced to three months in Charles Street Jail.

FEBRUARY 27, 1913—Larceny. Placed on probation.

OCTOBER 28, 1913—Common drunk. Sentenced to Sherburn, appealed; sent to the House of Correction for four months.

MAY, 1914—Forgery and uttering. Sentenced to Sherburn for indefinite period.

Money spent too lavishly upon the girlhood life of Ethel Kimball, of No. 17 Mortimer place, Somerville, ten times arrested in ten years for various offences, led to her downfall.

She was recently sentenced to an indefinite period in Sherborn prison.

No girl has been more warned against her evil doings than Ethel. But she would persist in doing wrong, in spite of the earnest entreaties of those who tried to do her good.

"What made her fall?" her friends are asking today.

She had too much money given to her when she was a mere girl by her grandfather, William Scollans of Foster street, Brighton.

GRANDFATHER'S PET.

In her old home on that street, Ethel's happiest days were spent. This was nearly twenty years ago. She was the pride of her grandfather. He was one of the best known contractors in that section. Anything that Ethel asked him to do for her would be done. If Ethel wanted another horse to drive, as she was very fond of horses, her grandfather would get it. He was most generous.

Old residents remember what a happy child Ethel was in her father's stable on Foster Street, where she had the choice of the horses, and would drive them around as she pleased.

In Sunday school, Ethel found it hard to learn the catechism, taught her by the late rector of St. Margaret's Episcopal Church, Rev. Augustine Prime. This church was only a block away from her own home on Foster Street, Brighton. She found it very difficult to memorize this lesson:

> To keep my hands from picking and stealing, not to be covetous or desirous of other men's goods, but to get my living honestly in this state of life, to which I am called.

Her Sunday school teacher talked about this only a short time ago, when the tenth sentence was pronounced upon her by the court.

Life changed for Ethel with financial reverses for her grandfather. The crash in Scollans' fortune came suddenly. He died and of former wealth and affluence there was nothing left. Home and money were gone in the crash. Nothing was saved.

When Ethel Kimball found herself denied the pleasures of Scollans' bounty, she took her first downward step. She began to steal. She had to have money. From stealing it was a short step to forgery and the girl was soon hardened to crime.

She was spurned by her family. Her clergyman warned her, pleaded with her and tried to get her mind on other things besides getting money. It was of no use. In her girlhood days she had money from her grandfather and now she must have it one way or another.

STOLE FROM FRIENDS.

She planned how to get money from one friend after another, until she got desperate at times and became fanatic in her dress, often wearing a man's hat and coat to win attention to herself and get some prominence in a peculiar way.

Deserted by every one, this pretty woman, once the pride of every neighbor on Foster street, in her younger days, has gone to Sherborn on an indefinite sentence after wearing out the patience of her father and mother and many old friends of the family who would have been glad to have helped Ethel to make a woman of herself.

Mrs. Daniel Hyde, her aunt, who lives near the old estate, Brighton, feels the unfortunate position in which Ethel has placed herself, and says:

"She is a defective, a moral degenerate. There is no other way of looking at it. Every thing was done for the girl, but she is to be put with that class who should go to a hospital for treatment rather than to a prison. It seems to me that we make a mistake in this way of handling such prisoners. She would listen to no good advice and resisted all help to give her another chance."

MOOSE PUT PLAN UP TO DEMOCRATS

Ward Challenges Other Parties to Raise Funds By Progressives' Method.

In a speech by Lauriston Ward, chairman of the Progressives City Committee, at the nightly supper of the workers on the $50,000 "Bull Moose" campaign fund canvass, held at No. 11 Earl street last night, the Democratic leaders of this State were challenged to raise their campaign funds in the same way that the Progressives are raising money.

Chairman Ward declared that the Republican party is too far gone to ever get back into power and that it would avail it little if their machine leaders changed their methods at this time. For the effect which it might have in the future upon politics in this State, he said he would like to see the Republican party emulate the example of the Progressives, this year.

Over $1,000 was added to the fund yesterday. The total of the fund in the hands of the auditors in the form of cash or written pledges is $18,357.15.

The Progressives are busy making preparations for the three big meetings to terminate their canvass.

On Tuesday evening a meeting will be held in Associate Hall, Worcester. The Springfield meeting will be held in Lenox Hall Wednesday evening.

The final meeting will be held in Horticultural Hall Thursday evening. At this meeting and at the Worcester and Springfield meetings United States Senator Moses E. Clapp of Minnesota will be the principal speaker. Charles Sumner Bird, Matthew Hale and others will also speak at the Horticultural Hall meeting.

East Wind Puts Hot Wave to Rout

The refreshing east wind which swept over Boston all day yesterday completely broke the back bone of the hot spell under which the city suffered during the past three days. Yesterday's maximum temperature was only eighty degrees. Despite this fact, however, one man was overcome, not by the effects of the weather yesterday but as an aftermath of the intense heat during the middle of the week. At the City Hospital, where he name is on the dangerous list, he is known as Frank Denick, forty-five years old, of No. 60 Hampstead street, West Roxbury.

The public bathhouses will be open today.

5 Killed in Hocking Valley Collision

LONGAN, O., June 13.—Five railroad men were killed, another painfully injured and a score of passengers hurt, when Hocking Valley passenger trains Nos. 137 and 1354 collided at Keggs Bend this afternoon. Failure of the station agent at Starr to set the block for No. 137, the north-bound train, is asigned by the railroad officials as the cause of the collision. The agent has disappeared.

Dr. Gordon Opposed to 'Christian Unity'

Declares Opposition Is the Spice of Religion.

"Opposition is the spice of religion nowadays," declares the Rev. George A. Gordon, D. D., pastor of the Old South Church. He believes that competition and division create interest in religion, and is therefore opposed to Christian unity.

Dr. Gordon addressed the ministers in Pilgrim Hall yesterday along these lines, stating that the sending of leaders of one faith to lead those of another would be a fatal mistake.

Take Brookline Man As Harvard Thief

Harold Sturtevant of No. 15 Blossom street, Brookline, whom the police say is Harold Plummer of No. 2161 Massachusetts avenue, Cambridge, will appear in the Cambridge district court tomorrow morning to answer to a complaint charging him with the larceny of four typewriters from the office of the Harvard Crimson. He was arrested in the North End yesterday. It is alleged that Sturtevant also entered the apartments of Henry Clark, a Harvard student,fi and stole a guitar and two suit cases.

Correct Way to Treat Skin Diseases

Both air and water seem to have a bad effect upon skin diseases like Eczema, of which there are many forms. Keeping out the water and air is the first thing to do. By using Cadum, the well-known remedy for skin diseases, air and water are excluded, because Cadum contains petrolatum and white wax, and these form a tight covering over the sore places upon the skin. Cadum also contains oil of cade, which has been successfully used many years by the medical profession in the treatment of Eczema and other skin trouble. If your skin is inflamed, irritated or sore, get a 10c box of Cadum of your druggist and try it. The 25c size box contains nearly four times as much as the 10c size and is cheaper to buy.

Doonan attempted to step from the tran after it had started. His condition is reported as serious.

MARION BURRAGE AND HUSBAND IN BOSTON

you?" the reporter asked in surprise. "No one here connected you with the Donald in the dispatches. They said you were English."

Young Donald laughed. "I don't know where they get that 'English' stuff," he declared. "I was born in Massachusetts, and so was my father. My grandfather was a good Scotchman—not English, by a long shot."

Nevertheless, even Graeme Donald's closest friends, reading the elopement, did not connect him with the story. Even Mrs. Donald, his mother, was in doubt till she heard from him direct.

Graeme is working as an artist in New York, having recovered from an illness that sent him to Saranac Lake to recuperate.

It was there the whirlwind courtship occurred—though young Donald was no stranger to the family. Last Summer he spent with his mother at Black Rock House, on the South Shore, and there and in Boston he has met his bride more than once.

Mrs. Donald as Marion Otis Gay married Francis Burrage in 1911, and was left a widow by his death less than a year later. Her father, Harry H. Gay, went to Saranac Lake about two years ago with an affection of the lungs, and Mrs. Gay and Mrs. Burrage went with him and nursed him back to the edge of health.

AN OUTDOOR GIRL.

It was as a guest at the Gay home that Donald went to Saranac two months ago. The two wonderful months of Spring, when the wine of youth and love runs fast through young veins, saw them constantly together. Mrs. Burrage is an accomplished horsewoman, plays tennis and golf and is an "outdoor girl."

She found Donald congenial, in spite of his ill health. But not a soul had an inkling of their intention when they autoed to Bloomingdale, ten miles away, and were married. She gave her maiden name of Marion Gay and said she had never been married before. The Rev. H. H. Richardson performed the ceremony. Later that day he was notified that a mistake had been made in the name—that it should have been Marion Gay Burrage, and the papers were corrected accordingly.

The secret of the marriage would have been well kept had not a curious minded drummer, noticing the whirling automobile that brought the two, and the pretty flutter of their arrival and departure, made inquiries. He passed the word of what he learned to a reporter—and the secret was out.

USED TO LUXURY.

Even Mr. and Mrs. Gay were tremendously surprised when reporters hurried to their cottage to ask for information of the report. The brand-new Mrs. Donald herself denied it.

But the truth was bound to be admitted.

Boston society folk took the whole thing very calmly, not connecting Donald's name with that of the son of the former Trinity rector. Young Donald, his friends say, has no private fortune. His mother has a moderate pension from Trinity. His bride has an $800 income. He himself earns something as an artist.

But he is used to luxurious life, and so is the new Mrs. Donald.

Mrs. Donald's father, Harry H. Gay, was recently expelled from the Boston Stock Exchange. He was a member of the firm of Gay & Sturgis, which failed April 22. His firm's affairs are in the hands of the Federal courts. He himself has not been active in business for two years.

Mrs. Donald's sister Agnes married Guy Murchie, who was a Rough Rider and who was appointed United States marshal here by President Roosevelt. She died about three years ago.

When You Are Troubled With Hairy Growths

(Modes of Today)

No woman need longer endure ugly, unsightly hairs on her face, neck or arms, for a simple and very effective method is here given to quickly banish such objectionable growths and leave the skin smooth and free from spot or blemish.

A thick paste, sufficient to cover the offensive hairs, is made by mixing a little of the powdered delatone with water. This is then spread over the hairy surface and in about two minutes rubbed off and with it comes every trace of hair. After this treatment the skin should be washed to free it from the remaining delatone. No danger or inconvenience results from this treatment and rarely is the second application required, but to avoid disappointment be sure to get the delatone in an original package. Any good druggist has it in stock.

VIEWS OF STATE COMMITTEE CHAIRMEN ON INITIATIVE AND REFERENDUM

Michael A. O'Leary.

By MICHAEL A. O'LEARY.

Chairman, Democratic State Committee.

The briefest plank of all, in the platform upon which the Democratic party asked last Fall for the support of the people of Massachusetts, was that devoted to the Initiative and Referendum.

"We DEMAND the adoption of the Initiative and Referendum!"

As chairman of the Democratic State Committee, it gives me great pleasure to say to the AMERICAN and its readers that I stand by the platform and by every plank in the platform.

And I maintain that our men in the Legislature, Democratic Senators and Democratic Representatives, are bound by the solemn compact with the people represented by the party platform.

We DEMAND the Initiative and Referendum!

By MATTHEW HALE.

Chairman, Progressive State Committee.

The constitutional amendment providing for the Initiative and Referendum is one of the most important planks in the platform of the Progressive party. Until it is passed the control of government will never be back in the hands of the rank and file.

We do not believe that the Initiative and Referendum should be used as a substitute for representative government. We DO believe that it should be used as a safeguard, so that the government will be representative of the whole people and not of a few special interests.

We believe that the Massachusetts resolve is so framed as to avoid the abuses which may have occurred in other States and that the Initiative and Referendum will give expression to the deliberate wishes of the people of the State.

NO TRUE PROGRESSIVE CAN FAIL TO VOTE FOR THIS PROVISION.

Matthew Hale.

ROOSEVELT TO RUN AGAIN FOR PRESIDENCY

Intimates Return to New York Will Signalize Entrance Into Campaign.

By W. ORTON TEWSON.

LONDON, June 13.—In almost every statement made today by Colonel Roosevelt in an hour's chat with thirty newspapermen at the home of Colonel Arthur Lee, he intimated broadly that his return to New York will signalize his formal entrance into the limelight as a candidate for the nomination for the presidency.

It was not altogether a pleasing arrival, viewed by Rooseveltian eyes, that the Colonel made this morning as he stepped from the Continental express at Charing Cross station. None of the reporters recognized him. The American Ambassador and half a dozen attaches of the embassy were at the wrong end of the platform, having been informed that the Colonel's special Pullman was attached to the rear of the train. The result was that Colonel Roosevelt, as he stepped from the carriage, expressed surprise and made almost disgusted remarks anent the lack of a reception, his confidents being his daughter, Mrs. Alice Roosevelt Longworth, and his nephew, Philip Roosevelt.

The first individual who greeted the distinguished explorer was the Archbishop of Canterbury, who had come up from Dover on the same train. Presently Ambassador Page and Colonel Lee hove in sight and seized their guest.

After that everything was all right.

VIGOROUS AS EVER.

Colonel Roosevelt's appearance today belies the reports sent from New York that he was emaciated and weak. He is almost as fleshy and physically vigorous as he ever was. But old-timers who remember the Oyster Bay Washington and Albany interviews, pointed out the significant fact that the ex-President seems to have strange difficulty in expressing different thoughts with the same lightning-like rapidity that used to characterize his utterance.

While engrossed in one of the subjects he speaks with all his old-time vigor, but his pauses when new questions come up were very noticeable today.

But Colonel Roosevelt wants every one to know that he is "just as fit" as he ever was. To prove it he explained at great length that the critics of his Washington lecture failed to realize that he was speaking in a big hall to five thousand persons and that the very nature of the subject precluded the possibility of talking as he would on a campaign tour.

DIFFERENCE IN SPEECHES.

"A political speech," he added, "is like a circus poster done in big broad strokes, but the exposition of scientific discourses is rather an etching incomparison."

Although he professed complete ignorance of the political situation for the moment in America, England and France, his first ejaculation on meeting Ambassador Page, was:

"Mr. Ambassador, it's bully to see you. By gracious it is getting so that a French Cabinet doesn't last any longer than a Paraguayan Presidency."

Colonel Roosevelt in order to oblige the reporters of the London evening newspapers received almost two score of them in Colonel Lee's house in Mayfair at 11 o'clock in the morning, before taking a bath, after his all night journey.

His first remark as he entered the drawing room was that he still had "a full share of French and English cinders." Then after insisting that he had "absolutely nothing to say," he talked almost an hour requiring little stimulus in the form of questioning.

Almost everything he said he characteristically forbade the newspapermen to print, explaining that it was his habit, formed in the old days in Washington, to talk "confidentially" to newspapermen.

But if there were any point in his subjects it was clearly evident from the first that he wanted the voters of the United States to know that he is fit to run again for the presidency, and that for all his refusal to be quoted on timely questions he is absolutely familiar with everything happening in Washington now.

RESERVES TOLLS OPINION.

"Will you say what you think of the passage of the Panama tolls repeal bill?" was one of the questions, for instance.

"You bet I won't," was his grinning response, followed by the grim significant aftermath—"Not yet."

After luncheon at Ambassador Page's house Colonel Roosevelt went to Colonel Lee's country house, Chequers court, in Buckinghamshire, where he will stay until Monday. Monday evening he will again receive the newspapermen in Colonel Lee's town house.

Colonel Roosevelt's lecture, which is set for Tuesday night, will not be controversial, despite the doubts cast by English authorities on the accuracy of his statement concerning the "absolutely wrong" existing maps of South America.

He sails for New York June 18.

Miss Doris Brown a Melrose Bride

Miss Doris Gerry Brown, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frederick W. Brown, of No. 63 East Emerson street, Melrose, and George E. Cornwall, Jr., of No. 54 Orient avenue, Melrose, were married last night at the home of the bride's parents by Rev. Thomas Sims, D. D., of the First Congregational Church. Mrs. Chester T. Brett of Allston was maid of honor, Miss Frances M. Task of Melrose flower girl, and the bridesmaids were Miss Anna L. Cornwall, a sister of the groom, and Miss Clara V. Franklin. Royal M. Warner of Melrose was best man.

CHIEFS OF TWO BIG PARTIES OUT FOR INITIATIVE

Bill Favorably Reported Puts Genuine Rule in Hands of People; G. O. P. to Be Heard.

Chairmen of two of the three major political parties call attention today, through the Sunday AMERICAN, to the fact that the Senators and Representatives of these parties are pledged in honor to support the Initiative and Referendum.

A resolve to provide for an amendment of the Constitution authorizing the Initiative and Referendum is now on the calendar of the House. It has been favorably reported by two committees—Constitutional Amendments and Ways and Means.

"No true Progressive," Chairman Matthew Hale of the Progressive party tells the Sunday AMERICAN, "will vote against this resolve."

Chairman M. A. O'Leary of the Democratic State Committee is quite as emphatic. Mr. O'Leary quotes six words from the Democratic platform on which Walsh, Barry, Boynton, Donahue, Mansfield and Pope—as well as the Senators and Representatives—were elected last November:

"We demand the Initiative and Referendum!"

THURSTON IS VIEWLESS.

Edward A. Thurston of Fall River, the new chairman of the Republican State Committee, preferred not to be quoted.

"I have not interested myself in legislation in any way," declared the new leader of the G. O. P., "and have not gone to the State House this year on anything except the Sherburne Corrupt Practices Act. I do not remember that our platform mentioned the initiative and referendum. My feeling is that Republican Senators and Representatives can be depended upon to follow their best judgment."

Mr. Thurston was asked how he feels "personally," about the initiative and referendum.

"I have no personal views on the subject," said the Republican chairman, "but you might talk with Representative Cox, the Republican leader of the House. I am devoting my time to traveling about the State in the interest of the Republican organization."

Representative Cox, floor leader of the Republicans in the House, declared in a Lincoln's Day address which attracted attention throughout the State, and which greatly cheered the hearts of the younger and more progressive Republicans that the Initiative and Referendum must be championed by his party if the Republican organization hopes to return to power.

The Initiative and Referendum resolve now before the Massachusetts House is declared to be "better safeguarded" than any measure of the kind which has been adopted by other States. Some of its features are that:

SOME OF THE FEATURES.

For a proposed amendment of the Constitution 50,000 signatures are demanded. Five citizens may put the machinery in motion.

For a legislative bill or resolve, 15,000 signatures.

If the Legislature fails to agree upon an amendment to the Constitution proposed by 50,000 the Legislature following. Whether that Legislature agrees or not, the proposed amendment will then be submitted to the people.

A bill submitted to the Legislature, on the petition of 15,000 voters, may—in event of adverse action—go to the people if within thirty days 10,000 more names are added to the petition.

The veto power of the Governor is not to extend to measures which have been approved by the people at the polls.

No proposition which has been rejected by the people can be resubmitted for five years thereafter.

Not more than 25 per cent. of the signatures necessary for a proposed amendment or a proposed act or resolve are to be secured in any one county.

The full text of every proposed measure is to be printed by the Secretary of State and distributed to every registered voter in Massachusetts.

So much as to the initiative, which is "the power to propose laws, resolves and amendments to the Constitution, and to enact, adopt or reject the same at the polls without concurrence of the General Court or of the Governor."

THE "SWORD AND SHIELD."

As for the referendum, or the power at their own option to "approve or reject at the polls any law or resolve of the General Court," the pending measure provides that if 25,000 voters protest against an act or resolve within sixty days after the Governor has signed it, the law so prostrated shall be suspended and referred to the people.

According to Progressive party doctrine, the initiative and referendum are looked upon as the "sword and shield of the people's rights."

SULPHUR DRIES UP ECZEMA AND STOPS ITCHING

This Old-Time Skin Healer Is Used Just Like Any Cold Cream.

With the first application of bold-sulphur cream the angry itching attending any eczema eruption ceases and its remarkable healing powers begin. Sulphur, says a renowned dermatologist, just common bold-sulphur, made into a thick cream will soothe and heal the skin when irritated and broken out with Eczema or any form of eruption. The moment it is applied all itching ceases and after two or three applications the Eczema disappears, leaving the skin clear and smooth.

He tells Eczema sufferers to get from any good pharmacy an ounce of bold-sulphur cream and apply it to the irritated, inflamed skin, the same as you would any cold cream.

For many years this soothing, healing sulphur has occupied a secure position in the treatment of cutaneous affections by reason of its parasite-destroying property. It is not only parasiticidal, but also antipruritic, antiseptic and remarkably healing in all irritable and inflammatory conditions of the skin. While not always establishing a permanent cure it never fails to instantly subdue the irritation and heal the Eczema right up and it is often years later before any eruption again appears on the skin.

One Rhododendron for Annual Show

Week of Sunshine Interferes With Society's Plans.

The rhododendron broke its annual engagement with the Massachusetts Horticultural Society this season, with result that the "Rododendron Show" in Horticultural Hall for yesterday and today boasts only one exhibit of that flower.

All the other rhododendrons, so to speak, consist of German Iris and Mrs. "Jack" Gardner's ever popular peonies.

The society planned its "Rhodo" show for earlier in this month. Alarmed by the backward Spring, the date was moved ahead to June 13 and 14. But in the deluge of sunshine the past week the "Rhodos" bloomed sooner than expected.

So practically the only exhibit of that flower at the show is one table of pale pink ones from the Walter H. Hunnewell estate at Wellesley.

The "Rhodos" didn't wait for the show.

Josephine P. Rogers Sues for Divorce

WILMINGTON, Del., June 13.—Josephine Pyle Rogers, aged twenty-four, daughter of the late Willard S. Pyle, a Morocco manufacturer, has started suit for divorce in New York against her husband, Theodore Beauclere Rogers, aged twenty-six, of Newcastle, Delaware, charging infidelity. Rogers is the only son of the late Theodore Beauclere Rogers, who was a nephew of the late Jacob S. Rogers, president and owner of the Rogers Locomotive Works, Paterson, N. J., who bequeathed five millions to the Metropolitan Museum of Art, New York. The nephew was an executor of the vast estate. My Tired Feet Ached for "Tiz"

"Just couldn't wait to take my hat off!"

Just take your shoes off and then put those weary, shoe-crinkled, aching, burning, corn-pestered, bunion-tortured feet of yours in a "TIZ" bath. Your toes will wriggle with joy; they'll look up at you and almost talk and then they'll take another dive in that "TIZ" bath.

When your feet feel like lumps of lead—all tired out—just try "TIZ." It's grand—it's glorious. Your feet will dance with joy; also you will find all pain gone from corns, callouses and bunions.

There's nothing like "TIZ." It's the only remedy that draws out all the poisonous exudations which puff up your feet and carse foot torture.

Get a 25 cent box of "TIZ" at any drug or department store—don't wait. Ah! how glad your feet get; how comfortable your shoes feel. You can wear shoes a size smaller if you desire.

Boston Polish Boy Heir to Fortune

Max Polkovoy, a Jewish boy who came to Boston from Russia six years ago practically penniless but determined to become an artist and later moved to New York, has fallen heir to $400,000.

A cablegram from Kurcun, Kiev, his home village in Russia, reached him from a widow of Abram Rabinowitz, a granduncle of the boy, telling him that the uncle had died and left him a large part of a million-dollar fortune.

When asked what he would do with his fortune, he said: "First, I will have my brother and mother come to this great land and then I will get a comfortable home for all my relatives here who have been so kind to me, even in the midst of their own struggles for life. I then hope to work and become an artist of note. NNo fortune will ever interfere with my work."

Suffrage Indorsed by Women's Club

Resolution Adopted by Convention at Chicago.

CHICAGO, June 13.—The resolution providing for indorsement of woman's suffrage was adopted by the twelfth biennial convention of the General Federation of Women's Clubs at today's session.

Suffrage leaders although declaring that today's action of the convention was a big victory for "The Cause," expressed disappointment over the tone of the "Denatured suffrage" resolution. They had hoped the convention would go on record pledging the 1,600,000 women represented in the biennial to fight for the equal ballot.

'Furies' May Drive Queen from London

LONDON, June 13.—Queen Mary has decided, in case of further suffragette demonstrations in the vicinity of royalty, to quit London abruptly and leave King George to finish the season alone, according to a source in close touch with the court and the government. The Queen is represented as being in a condition of nervous apprehension. She, it is said, has no intention of allowing her existence to be made unhappy by those she habitually calls the "furies." Should the Queen be forced to carry her threat into execution the step will create an unparalleled social sensation.

Bar to Raise Tablet at Webster Home

The memory of Daniel Webster as a lawyer will be publicly honored Saturday at Webster's old home in Marshfield by a distinguished company of judges and lawyers. A large bronze tablet, suitably inscribed, will be placed at the entrance of the Webster estate, an oration on Webster will be delivered, and in other ways it is planned to make the occasion a noteworthy one.

The celebration has been planned by the Boston University Law School Association, which is comprised of graduates and former members of the Boston University Law School, the occasion being the annual outing of that organization. But the celebration of "Webster Day" will not be restricted to members of this association, for Webster was not a graduate of any law school, and any who desire may participate.

Governor Walsh, many judges of the Massachusetts supreme, judicial and superior courts and judges of many inferior courts throughout the State, will be present.

DRAMA OF LONDON BORES ALAN DALE

"There's No Red Blood In It," Says Noted Critic; Shaw's "Pygmalion" Best of All.

LONDON, June 13.—Alan Dale, the New York American's dramatic critic, now in London, is the subject of a column interview in today's Evening News, the afternoon edition of Lord Northcliff's Daily Mail.

"Your drama all round is the drama of fatigue—there's no red blood in it.

"And yet London, I think, does appreciate vital stuff."

Speaking for the New York stage, Dale admitted there have been too many theatres in that city and that the motion pictures have hit them all. He said:

"A good many are now being turned into picture houses. It was a question of making them picture houses or garages, and the pictures won."

"However," Dale said, "it is simply insane to think the days of the theatre are numbered."

"New York, I think, is going to be the market of the world for plays," opines Dale. "Paris, Berlin and London are all played out. In New York we have a lot of young blood among the playwriters, as you can see by the pieces they have been sending over."

Dale's best word is for Shaw's "Pygmalion," which he thinks is just right.

"Shaw," he said, "is beginning to tumble to himself. He's not so discursive or philosophic, but just as amusing."

THE GREAT ANNUAL SALE IN OUR BOSTON AND PROVIDENCE STORES

A SALE OF TWO CITIES

SHEPARD NORWELL COMPANY BOSTON

THE SHEPARD COMPANY
PROVIDENCE

—The practical principle of "CO-OPERATION" has worked its wonders in the Shepard Stores, as in other modern enterprises. Manufacturers and importers seek big outlets. The combined buying power of two Shepard Stores enables us to buy our merchandise on an equal footing with the world's largest stores. And today we present unmistakable proof of the great economies made possible by combined and concentrated endeavor.

PRICES WITH ACTION in them have been made and the shopping response will be large. The new Shepard policies of action, constant arrivals of new fashions, reasonable profits, and exact statement of facts—command a confidence that is bringing about a great expansion in this business.

IF YOU HAVE a charge account with the Shepard Company, Providence, your account is also good at Shepard Norwell Company, Boston. Both stores are under the same ownership and have the advantage of combined action on important questions. High merchandise standards prevail in both stores.

We are not in the habit of holding SKY-ROCKETING SALES, and we underestimate what we have to sell as better than possibly over-rating it. In this case, we place on sale such values that anyone can plainly see that we are giving full measure and asking smaller profits. No necessity for bombast, because thrifty New Englanders know the Shepard quality.

The Centres of Greatest Buying Interest Will Be Waists, Ribbons, Millinery, Men's Store, Rugs, Gloves. Plan to Be Here to Take Advantage on Monday

THIS IS A "BENJAMIN FRANKLIN" SALE —"Think of saving as well as of getting," said the great American who spent his boyhood in Boston. "Be sure your savings are real," is also worth considering. In our own case, we do not often find it wise to make price reductions, for Bostonians know that our right low prices in the first place—and the way we safeguard the quality—are greater inducements to buy. The crowd should be thick, for every section puts forth decidedly unusual values.

STEAMERS IN CRASH REPORT EVERYONE SAFE

New York Hull's Torn, But Is Able to Proceed: Pretoria Continues Trip

BOSTON MEN ARE HEROES

BY WIRELESS, S.S. NEW YORK, via Siasconset, June 13.—Editor American: Damage slight; proceeding. All well.—(Captain) Roberts.

On board the steamship New York, June 13 (by wireless)—Proceeding slowly on account of the fog and because of the damage which she received in a collision with the Hamburg-American liner Pretoria. The steamship New York will not reach quarantine before 6 o'clock tomorrow morning.

The collision occurred at 3:26 o'clock this morning in a dense fog when 400 miles east of the Ambrose channel light.

The blow tore a hole thirty-two feet long and twelve feet deep in the side of the New York fifty feet aft the bow. There was no damage below the water line.

Anxiety as to the fate of the Pretoria has been relieved by a wireless message from that ship saying that she was not seriously injured is proceeding on her way.

The crash made the New York tremble from stem to stern, and aroused all the 265 cabin passengers. They rushed on deck and hastily put on life preservers. The New York heeled to starboard and increased the alarm of the passengers. Some were hysterical, but there were only slight indications of a panic.

REPORTED NO DANGER.

Captain W. J. Roberts of the New York went below to make a personal examination of the damage. He quickly reported there was no danger. This relieved the fears of the passengers who shook hands with one another and gathered in excited groups and told of their experiences.

The New York left Southampton for New York city on June 6. The Pretoria with 750 passengers sailed from New York for Boulogne and Hamburg on June 11.

The 265 passengers of the New York include twenty-five children. The crew numbers 390 which makes a total of 655 persons on board.

Bostonians led by the Rev. Francis E. Clark, the Father of Christian Endeavor quelled what might have been a panic aboard the New York.

The crash occurred while most of the passengers were asleep in their cabins, and the officers were unable to quiet the alarmed voyagers until Father Clark and other cool members of the party of Boston tourists came to their aid.

Mrs. Ben S. Allen received the praise of her fellow passengers for her calmness. She left her children asleep when she went on deck and decided not to awaken them when she was told that the ship could make port without difficulty.

PRETORIA STANDS BY.

In the meantime the Pretoria backed away and stood by, occasionally sounding a signal with her whistle. About 4 a. m. Captain Roberts notified Captain Dugge of the Pretoria that he was in no need of assistance, and the German liner started on her way. From that time wireless dispatches from the New York state nothing was heard from her.

Just before the accident occurred Captain Roberts of the New York had ordered the engines full speed astern and his ship was traveling backward when the Pretoria rammed her.

CRASH IN HEAVY FOG.

The collision occurred in a heavy fog. Precautions taken by Captain Roberts as soon as the fog settled down undoubtedly prevented another great ocean tragedy.

At 12:50 a. m. when the fog became thick all the bulkheads of the vessel were closed and the commander took the bridge in person. Shortly after 3 a. m. he heard the signals of the Pretoria, and ordered the New York's engines stopped. Suddenly the prow of the Pretoria came out of the fog at 3:26 a. m., and she struck the New York as the American liner was speeding astern in response to a sudden call upon her engines.

Here is a bet that a Cambridge letter carrier offered to a Harvard student on the result of the student's final examinations:

"I'll give you whole box of cigars for every 'E' you get, if you'll give me a good cigar for every 'A' or 'B.'"

"E" means "Failed," while "A" and "B" are honor marks. The letter carrier knew the student was a good scholar.

"Nothing doing," said the student, "there are no 'E' marks coming to me."

Appeal to Walsh in Fight to Save Charlesbank to Mothers and Babies

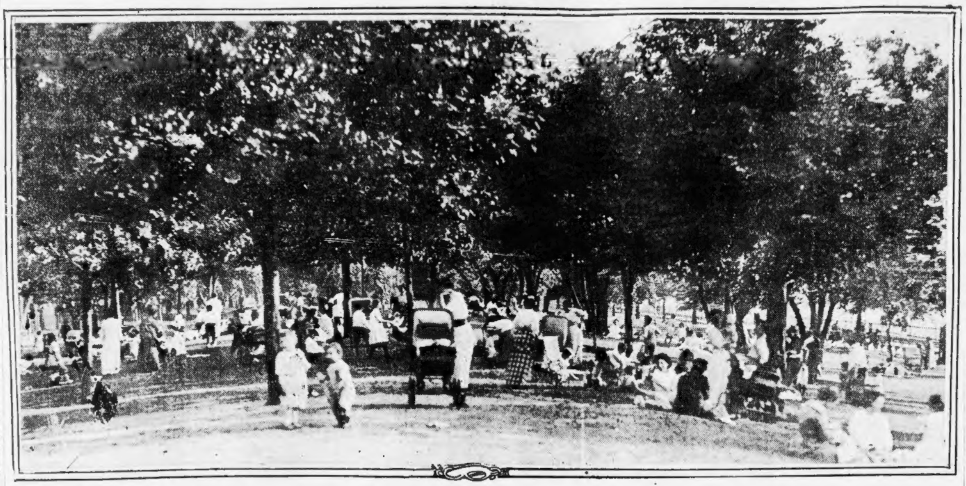
WEST END MOTHERS AND CHILDREN ON THE "KNOLL," CHARLESBANK PLAYGROUND



This is the breathing space in the city's most congested district that Mayor Curley would take as a site for the new high-power pumping station.

Attorney Mitchell Freeman, acting for West End residents and the social workers of the Women's Municipal League, yesterday sent a letter to Governor Walsh for a public hearing upon Mayor Curley's plans to locate the new high pressure pumping station on the Charlesbank Playground in the West End.

Mayor's decision to overrule all protests in behalf of this recreation spot has roused a host of Boston's leading social workers and wealthy women and has stirred up an unprecedented storm of protest in the West End.

The Mayor's final decision that the pumping station would go as planned was the chief topic of discussion there yesterday. That assertion stood out above his conference with Mrs. J. Randolph Coolidge and other prominent women, in which he explained that the proposed site would not be next the West Boston bridge, but opposite the Eye and Ear Infirmary. Those in touch with the 400,000 persons whose only breathing space is the recreation park declare that this shift of location does not help the situation in the least.

"Not an inch of space in the Charlesbank recreation park of the West End can be spared," declared a prominent woman social worker yesterday afternoon.

"We are indeed protesting very much," declared Mrs. Thomas Sherwin of No. 150 Commonwealth avenue, Back Bay. "This place, where it is proposed to build the pumping station, is about the only place in the park where the children can be allowed to run freely without danger. No men are admitted here, and many tired mothers with their children find it the one enjoyable breathing space in their long Summer of toil and poverty. The trees are well grown there—it is admirable for the congested district about it.

URGE OTHER SITES.

"We dislike to oppose every suggestion that the Mayor makes regarding the pumping station, but there are other localities farther along the Charlesbank not so needed by the poor people where the station could be just as well located. It seems likely that in the end the Mayor will take some other spot."

Mrs. Sherwin suggests that the old gas house building in the rear of the nurses' home on Charles street at the corner of Cambridge be selected for the site of the pumping station.

"Anyone who understands the situation will join in our protest," she declared.

A vigorius letter of protest from a well-known social worker and West End resident was yesterday received by the editor of the Boston AMERICAN. This letter reads:

> Dear Sir—Mayor James M. Curley has announced his decision to place the high pressure pumping station on the Charlesbank Playground opposite the Massachusetts Charitable Eye & Ear Infirmary. It has been stated in one of the Boston papers that when a group of West End citizens, and interested women from the Back Bay found that the proposed location was not to be the mothers' and children's enclosure, but farther to the north on the shaded knoll, they largely withdrew their objections.
>
> As a West End citizen I wish to state that the feeling against any encroachment upon the Charlesbank Playground is resented, and that the hundreds of men and women who signed the petition imploring His Honor to find some other spot for the pumping station are not ready to say that they prefer the loss of one part of their park to another.
>
> The Charlesbank recreation park is a small area of breathing space for the most congested district in the city of Boston, and it is the only open park for more than 200 acres of solid tenements. Every foot of ground is used during the hot weather, and on Summer afternoons and evenings thousands upon thousands of West End residents pour into the park, driven there by the insufferable heat of the tenements.
>
> The majority of these people are without means to move into the suburbs, or without opportunity to enjoy Summer vacations. Many of them are unable to speak for themselves as they do not understand the English language, but they appreciate all the more Boston's free gift to them, a park and playground where they are always welcome and where they find health and enjoyment, cooled by the breezes from the Charles River.
>
> A pumping station covering an area of 12,000 square feet would perceptibly lessen the small park space, and it would seem to us of the West End that the city can ill afford to take one foot of the priceless area of the Charlesbank Park, although another location may cost far more in time and money.
>
> Sincerely yours,
>
> J. P. W.
>
> No. 357 Charles street.

ONLY BREATHING SPACE.

Miss Frost, a noted social worker of No. 108 Mount Vernon street, strongly opposed the Charlesbank location:

"The park," she says, "is the one bearable spot in the West End during the hottest days. Any plan that proposed to usurp any part of this playground should be vigorously opposed. There is no chance that this playground spot will ever increase in size. There is every probability that each year will find the environment of the location more and more congested and the demands upon the park greater and greater."

25 STABBED BY MADMAN ON CANOPIC

Five on Boston Steamship to Naples Mortally Wounded By Maniac.

PONTA DELGADA, Azores, June 13.—Twenty-five persons suffering from wounds inflicted by an insane steerage passenger were in the hospital of the liner Canopic, bound from Boston to Naples, when she arrived here today. Five of the wounded passengers were so badly hurt that they will probably die.

An Italian steerage passenger, going suddenly insane, ran among the passengers brandishing a long knife. With maniacal strength he fought off the seamen who tried to subdue him and dashed among the terrified passengers.

For hours the maniac held the ship in a panic while frightened men and women huddled together too badly scared to attempt to overpower the man. Finally the maniac was struck over the head from behind and put in irons.

The occurrence is the second of the kind on the Canopic within a short time. On her last trip from Boston to Mediterranean ports several weeks ago a madman ran amuck with a revolver, killing one man and fatally shooting another.

At the time Cardinal O'Connell was a passenger on the liner. With him was Monsignor Splaine. When he was told of the double tragedy, Monsignor Splaine hurried to the dying man and administered the last rites of the church. It was with the greatest difficulty that the madman was overcome and put in chains.

'Use Less Water,' Is Wakefield appeal

The Water Commissioners of Wakefield have requested householders to refrain from using water for garden purposes during fires in the town. This was made necessary by the low pressure of the Metropolitan supply occasioned by the small main that connects Stoneham and Wakefield temporarily.

At a fire Friday night it was found that the pressure was poor, due to lawn sprinkling, etc.

The Water Commissioners have also ordered that a fire be kept under the boilers at the municipal pumping station at Crystal Lake, in order that the local water supply, recently ordered shut off by the State Board of Health, may be resorted to in emergency.

Boston Suspect Caught in Newark

A too great fondness for strawberry short-cake and automobile rides led to the arrest of Leonard Shrubey, about thirty-five years of age and colored, yesterday, in a caterer's store on Hillside avenue, Newark, N. J. The caterer became suspicious because of the large amount of shortcake he ordered and notified the police of his suspicions. Shrubey was wanted by the Boston police on the charge of receiving property by forging the name of his former employer, C. R. Reech, a business man of 110 Summer street. Inspector Conboy brought Shrubey to Boston.

DOUGLAS TAKEN BACK TO NEWARK, CRIES FOR BRIDE

Social Service Adviser Who Deserted Wellesley Girl Thought to Be Faking Collapse.

Kenneth D. Douglas, the Newark "social service adviser," who deserted his six-weeks' bride, formerly Miss Marjory Stoneman of Taunton, (Wellesley College, 1912) was taken back to Newark yesterday, handcuffed to another prisoner who is wanted in New York city.

Douglas had waived examination after being trapped here and held for the Boston police by two Wellesley classmates of his heart-broken bride. He was committed to the City Prison.

Yesterday noon he was turned over to the custody of Sergeant Patrick J. Ryan of Newark. It happened that Sergeant Dalton of New York was leaving the city with John Hickey, who is charged with larceny in New York. The sergeants handcuffed Hickey and Douglas together, so they could be easily guarded, without being hitched to the officers themselves. Then the quartet set out for the station and boarded the 1:03 for New York.

SERIOUS CHARGES.

Douglas will face serious charges in Newark. He is accused of perjury in securing his marriage license, also of obtaining money under false pretences from the Newark haberdasher, who says he cashed a worthless check for Douglas.

Douglas broke down completely in the Charles street jail when he heard that his bride of six weeks in Newark had declared she was "through with Mr. Douglas forever." He cried like a child for "My Marjory," and vowed that she was his wife, legally. There had been some question whether he was divorced from a previous wife. He insisted that he was. It is possible he will be charged with polygamy when he returns to Newark.

INSPECT "BREAKDOWN."

Douglas' breakdown was so complete that a doctor was called. The physician wanted to send him to the Psychopathic Hospital for examination, but the prison officials refused to do this. They believe Douglas is simply a clever actor, trying to lay the ground-work for an insanity defence, and point out that he has completely fooled his acquaintances wherever he has gone, posing as a religious publicist and social service worker.

Douglas was instead sent to the City Prison and examined. The doctors there found he was under great nervous strain and in poor physical condition, but showed no signs of real irrationality.

Douglas' picture, it is said, is in the local Rogues' Gallery as the result of an old larceny case; but any charges pending here were waived so that he could return to Newark to have the tangle there straightened out.

Miss Meeker Bride of A. J. M'Cosker

J., on Wednesday, June 10. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Henry Allchin at the Dorchester residence of Bishop Anderson. Mr. McCosker is employed on the Boston AMERICAN and formerly worked on the Hearst papers in New York.

THOUSANDS ENJOY OUTING OF THE 'L' OFFICE WORKERS

Sports and Dancing for Great Throng at Riverside Recreation Grounds.

Several thousand office employes of the Boston Elevated Railroad, with their wives and sweethearts, enjoyed themselves yesterday afternoon at their third annual field day at the Riverside Recreation Grounds in Auburndale. The presence of several of the high officials of the road added to the interest of the occasion. The party arrived early, and a basket lunch was served on the grounds. Many of the party invaded the dance hall immediately upon their arrival, and the orchestra was kept in full swing until evening.

For the men, sporting events were run off on the athletic grounds, and during this time the girls deserted the dance hall for the field. Canoes were at the disposal of all and hundreds took advantage of the privilege offered them.

Among the spectators was General Bancroft, head of the system. Other officials present were Charles S. Sergeant, Henry L. Wilson, J. Henry Neal and Russell A. Sears.

The outing was in charge of a general committee of three, H. B. Potter, chairman; E. R. Olin, treasurer, and J. A. Howard, secretary.

YOUNGER SMART SET HAS GALA DAY AT COUNTRY CLUB RACES ON BROOKLINE COURSE

Foss Twins Among Early Arrivals and Abandon Custom of Growning Alike

Despite the numerous counter-attractions, including the polo games in New York and the regular week end holiday spent out of town, the Country Club races were a strong drawing card for society and all of it left in town was at Brookline yesterday, in the latest and finest of Spring raiment.

Though the grand stand was far from filled, the clubhouse and lawn just dotted in comparison with other years and nearly all the boxes empty, those who were there seemed to be enjoying the occasion to the fullest.

Mrs. A. Henry Higginson, that charming and attractive young matron, whose box is always filled with handsomely gowned guests, was among the missing. The Higginson box was occupied by Mr. and Mrs. Henry L. Higginson and their young grandson. Mrs. Higginson was among the earliest arrivals and wore a suit of deep purple cloth with a black hat and long black silk coat.

The younger members of the smart set were naturally the ones who flaunted the latest styles and the best dressed of them wore the long plaited tunics and the tiny little hats perched well over the right side. Parasols of every hue were carried and when not, smart little canes were substituted.

White spats and satin hats were other novelties, as well as the extremely wide sash, girdless wound about the waist and ending in a large bow in the back tied several inches below the waist line.

FOSS TWINS THERE.

Miss Esther Foss who was there with her fiance attracted much attention for she looked especially well in her gown of dark blue satin with a long tunic of blue satin flowered with rose and a small black hat trimmed with white breasts and tipped well over the right ear.

It would seem that the Foss girls, who have always previously dressed alike, have already given up the idea. Yesterday Miss Helen wore a trig suit of dark blue with long tuniced coat and a small black hat. Just as she arrived, Esther and her fiance were crossing the paddock and the two girls so dissimilarly gowned, waved a gay little salute to one another.

Among the brides who attracted much admiration was Mrs. Walter Hunnewell, Jr., who before her marriage was Minna Lyman and who only recently returned from the honeymoon abroad. She seemed radiantly happy and was kept busy entertaining the various groups who surrounded her. She is quite well tanned and looked particularly stunning in her gown of dark blue satin with tunic of blue chiffon and a white hat trimmed with white osprey.

WONDERFUL BABY.

Mrs. J. Cameron Bradley, who before her marriage was Miss Helen Sears, was out for practically the first time since the birth of her baby and was looking more charming than ever in white with a white cape with wide yellow collar and edging of the same. Her hat was one of the very small ones, tipped at just the proper angle. She was very proudly answering all questions regarding here very young off-spring and her good looking husband stood near and occasionally attempted to tell his friends what a really wonderful baby it is. All his attempts, however, were received with much merriement by the gentlemen of the party and he was finally forced to refrain from parental praise.

Miss Helen Frick who was there with a party of young friends was most attractive in a gown of olive green satin and a black hat trimmed with black plumes. The green of her gown brought out to perfection her pretty coloring and very rosy cheeks. cheeks.

Mrs. Charles P. Greenough, 2d, who is growing so wonderfully slender was there very early and never looked unusually well in her smartly fashioned gown of dark satin and moire and light brown hat, faced with blue and trimmed with blue velvet and red roses. She carried a blue parasol to match.

WORE NEW GREEN SAGE.

Mrs. Edward D. Brandegee who was among the very few of the fashionable box holders occupying their boxes was wonderfully smart in a suit of white cloth embroidered in green and a small hat of the newest sage green shade trimmed with small wings of white and also of sage green.

Mrs. Roy B. Baker was one of the most attractively gowned women present and wore a handsome frock of white with long white tunic edged with lavender embroidery. Her hat was one of the new white satin ones trimmed with two lavender plumes, and her parasol was also lavender.

Miss Olivia Ames carried off the honors among the younger girls, and looked unusually ell in her smartly fashioned gown of light tan with a long tunic, and small white hat with a wreath of red geraniums about the top of the crown.

Mrs. Lothrop Brown, who before her marriage was Helen Hooper, was there and occupied her husband's well placed box, where she entertained her many friends and was kept busy greeting them. She is a cousin of Miss Ames, and the two were sister debutantes, and while they stood a little apart they enjoyed a nice but brief little visit. Mrs. Brown was in dark blue satin with a hat of dark blue, and has taken to wearing a short bag.

MRS TURNER STUNNING.

One of the very stunning young matrons who made her way several times from the grand stand to the paddock and club house lawn, was Mrs. Oliver Turner, who before her marriage just a year ago was Marie Lee. She looked taller and more slender than ever in her gown of dark blue with long plaited tunic, and her small black hat perched on one side and trimmed with just one white butterfly. She came with her husband and her mother, Mrs. George Lee, the latter stunning in black gown with touches of white, and a small black hat trimmed with white wings.

Mrs. Alfred Codman was one of the handsomest women present and wore a gown of dark blue trimmed with purple and a small purple hat.

Mrs. William Farnsworth was in white with a long black coat and black hat.

Mrs. Edwin S. Webster, who entertained in her box, was stunning in a suit of black and white check and a small watteau shaped hat. Her pretty daughter Frances was a white.

Mrs. R. L. Perkins was another matron entertaining in her box and wore a gray suit with black hat trimmed with a green osprey.

FUN IN SHAW BOX.

The Robert Gould Shaw box held an interesting party of youngsters and kept Mrs. Shaw and her friends looking after them continually so enthusiastic were they over the races. Mrs. Shaw was in black with a black hat trimmed with black wings.

Mrs. Boylston Beal was handsome in a gown of dark blue satin and chiffon with a hat to match, and Miss Helen MacNichol wore a suit of blue and carried a cane.

Man Three Months Wed Tries Suicide

Pietro Malolhaias, twenty-four, living on River street, Waltham, is on the dangerous list at the Waltham Hospital as the result of an unsuccessful suicidal attempt by shooting. Malolhaias came home from work yesterday and greeted his three months' dinner prepared for him, but he went up to his bedroom on the second floor, saying that he intended to change his clothes.

He had been gone but a few minutes, when his wife heard a shot. She rushed upstairs and found him lying on a bed with a bullet from a 32-calibre revolver in his lung.

The injured man regained consciousness when he arrived at the hospital. He told Dr. Strickland that he was tired of living, and that he had made up his mind two weeks ago to do away with himself.

To make your kidneys healthy and strong you should lose no time in taking Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Remedy. It acts beneficially on the delicate tissues of the kidneys, stimulates the diseased parts, purifies the blood by increasing the circulation and awakens the torpid liver; assists in digestion and tones the system, enabling every organ to do its work properly and fully. HAIR CAME OUT BY COMBFULS

Dandruff Could be Seen Plainly. Scalp Itched All the Time. Rash on Scalp Caused Sores. Cuticura Soap and Ointment Cured.

Railroad St., Amherst, Mass.—"My trouble began first with dandruff. It could be seen plainly. My scalp became so bad that it itched all the time and my hair came out so I began to think there wouldn't be any left. It came out by combfuls every time I combed it. There was a rash on my scalp causing it to itch and making sores after a time.

"I used hair tonics some time but they seemed to do no good. Then I tried Cuticura Soap and Ointment and they worked like magic. I first washed my head with Cuticura Soap and then put the Cuticura Ointment on. I had used them only several times before my scalp felt much better. I purchased two boxes of Cuticura Soap and four boxes of Cuticura Ointment and my scalp was cured." (Signed) Miss Bessie E. Cleveland, July 23, 1913.

Retain your good looks, keep your skin clear, scalp clean and free from dandruff, hair live and glossy, hands soft and white, nails sound and shapely. Cuticura Soap, with an occasional use of Cuticura Ointment, will promote and maintain these coveted conditions in most cases when all else fails. Besides in purity, delicate medication, convenience and economy, they meet with the approval of the most discriminating. Sold everywhere. Liberal sample of each mailed free, with 32-p. Skin Book. Niland Puts Tunnel Tolls up to Mayor

Convinced Curley Has Power to Remove Tax.

Representative Thomas A. Niland of East Boston yesterday put the appropriation of money for the payment of the East Boston tunnel tolls by the city of Boston squarely up to Mayor Curley. Niland said in a letter to the Mayor:

"At the last election the will of the people was expressed in two important matters. You were chosen Mayor and the right was also granted to appropriate the money needed for the payment of the East Boston tolls. You have taken your place as the chief executive, but we still pay the tolls. I am convinced that the power lies in your hands to take the next step necessary to remove the unjust tax."

Messenger Higgins' Pay Cut to $399.99

James F. Higgins, a messenger in the employ of the Schoolhouse Commissioners, has had his pay cut. He was drawing $450 a year until it was discovered that the civil service regulations do not permit persons in clerical positions, not examined and passed by the board, to draw $400 or more per annum. Rather than discharge a faithful employe the commission cut his pay to $399.99.

Munsterberg Tests for Railroad Men

Tests for brain activity devised by Professor Hugo Musterberg, of Harvard, are being tried by the Pennsylvania Railroad on candidates for positions as engineer. The tests are confined principally to noting the action taken by the candidates on seeing green, white and red, the colors chiefly in use for railroad signalling. The men who note the different colors the quickest are presumed to be better for engineering than those whose mental processes fail to respond so readily to color changes.

FEATHER WINS RELEASE FROM INSANE ASYLUM

Superintendent Who Shot Up Stowe Woolen Mill to Have a Second Trial.

A CONSPIRACY IS CHARGED

Phineas Feather, the mill superintendent who shot up the office of the Gleason Woolen Mill at Stowe, and who has been an inmate of the Hospital for Insane Criminals at Bridgewater, since January 10, 1912, has been transferred to the East Cambridge jail.

This means that he will be tried a second time for the same shooting before a Middlesex County jury within a few weeks. It means that the loyalty of his wife and the resourcefulness of his lawyer, George W. Reed of Barristers' Hall, have borne fruit. It means that the inventor is one step nearer freedom.

Attorney Reed is confident his client will be acquitted. He says the hardest part of the two years' fight was to get Feather out of the Bridgewater Hospital, where he had been committed for "indefinite observation." This, in the opinion of counsel, was equivalent to a life term.

MRS. FEATHER PLEASED.

Mrs. Feather is delighted over the initial victory. She has made tremendous sacrifices in her fight for her husband's liberation. She mortgaged their cottage at Stowe, and later was obliged to part with it and her personal valuables and go to work at the age sixty-six, as housekeeper.

Although the case looked hopeless at times Mrs. Feather never wavered. She has been assisted by her daughter Hazel, now Mrs. John Hall of No. 15 Hutchinton stret, Winthrop Highlands; Miss Mary Feather, sister of the imprisoned man and a niece, Mrs. Anna V. Le Lasher of Malden.

Mr. Feather's sister has given money and time, and the daughter, Hazel, sold her diamond ring to raise funds. Cash was exhausted months ago, but Attorney Reed was too sympathetic and interested to give up the case.

He petitioned the Superior Court in February to have the sanity of Feather determined. He claimed his client had been improperly committed. Relatives charged Feather had been "railroaded and persecuted." The prayer was heard by Judge Keating in open court and denied. Dr. Emerson of the Bridgewater Hospital reported that in his opinion Feather was still insane and required observation.

GOES TO SUPREME COURT.

Then Attorney Reed carried the case to the Supreme Court on a habeas proceeding. He claimed Feather's case was beyond the jurisdiction of the Hospital for Criminal Insane; that he had been committed without proper medical examination and after "insufficient inquiry." Judge De Courcy ruled that jurisdiction was entirely within the Middlesex Superior Court.

Undismayed Attorney Reed filed another motion in Superior Court at East Cambridge, asking that court to determine the sanity of Feather. Judge Pierce heard this motion and found Feather to be sane on the facts presented. He ordered Feather transferred to the East Cambridge jail for a new trial.

Attorney Reed has enlisted two of the ablest alienists in New England. They examined Feather at the Bridgewater Hospital and pronounced him sane. One of the alienists figured in the Thaw case. They will be the star witnesses for the defence at the next trial.

The shooting occurred at the Gleason mill in Stowe, March 27, 1911. Alfred D. Gleason, bank president and millionaire owner of the mill, had a narrow escape. Feather and Gleason had trouble over money matters. Feather had been in charge of Gleason's mill twenty-three years. He claims to have developed the industry. He is an inventor, designer and wool expert.

DISPUTE OVER $40,000.

He claimed Gleason promised him a commission on increased business. He went to collect $40,000. There was a dispute. Feather, in a moment of frenzy, is alleged to have tried to shoot Gleason who grappled with him. In the struggle Charles E. Roberts, who succeeded Feather as superintendent, was wounded and a second bullet struck Feather in the elbow.

Feather was indicted June 5, 1911, on the charge of assaulting Roberts with a revolver with intent to kill. He was acquitted in September of that year. In November, 1911, he was indicted again, this time on the charge of "assaulting with a dangerous weapon Robert E. Bevis (another clerk in the office) with intent to murder Alfred D. Gleason." By reason of insanity he was committed without trial to the Bridgewater institution. Dr. Isador Coriat and Dr. William H. Prescott reported Feather to be suffering from "epileptic equivalent."

The odd phraseology of the second indictment and the fact that it was not returned until three months after the first trial caused the family to charge that Feather was being persecuted.

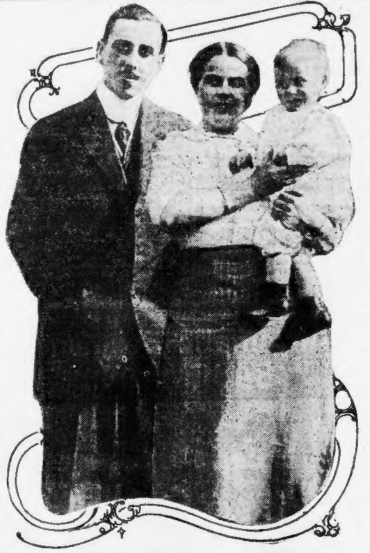
Released Man Scores the Jury

◆

Raps Inspector's 'Third Degree'

HERBERT T. ANDREWS, HIS WIFE AND BABY BOY



Herbert T. Andrews of Quincy, the man unexpectedly freed from Deer Island yesterday, after his innocence of passing worthless checks had been established by the confession of Earl Barnes, was too filled with happiness last night at being reunited with his parents, wife and baby, to be very bitter over his cruel experience.

But Andrews did have some things to say about Police Inspector Conboy, who arrested and worked up the case against him, about the "third degree," and his experience in the Tombs and at Deer Island.

He accuses Inspector Conboy of nagging him to plead guilty, saying:

"Come on, now, you know you're guilty. You just admit you're guilty, and I'll do all I can for you."

This was part of Andrews' "third degree" at headquarters. Andrews replied to the Inspector: "I'll rot first. I'm not guilty."

SCORES INSPECTORS.

"Inspectors Conboy and Lyons," says Andrews, "came to my house on Hemenway street, Back Bay—where we were living then—and said they wanted me for forgery. I was dumfounded, but I asked Conboy if he had a warrant. He said: 'I don't need any. Come along.'

"I wanted to give the address of where I would be taken, so my wife would know where I would be. But Conboy said: 'She knows where to get you. Let her come to headquarters.'

'Inspector Conboy has no sympathy for a man. At headquarters I got the 'third degree.' Inspector Conboy tried to make me confess. He almost put the words in my mouth. He would show me a picture of Barnes, whom he took to be me, and say: 'Isn't that you?'

"I kept saying: 'I am innocent.'

"Conboy kept saying: 'Come on. You know you're guilty.' Then he would urge me to plead guilty and he would do what he could for me.

TELLS OF "IDENTIFICATION."

"The way of trying to identify me was very questionable. I was put in a room. The doors were opened and in rushed forty or fifty men on whom checks had been passed. None of them knew me, yet some declared I had passed bad checks on them. Some freed from blame.

"It was the most trying ordeal I even went through. The prisoner at the mercy of some of our officials has my deepest sympathy.

"I was sent over to the Tombs. Inspector Conboy thus put me through two nights of misery. The Tombs is a hole worse than——. At the Tombs I was given worse than inhuman treatment. It was barbaric. It was even worse than being thrown in a pigpen. A man had to go without washing his face and hands and was forced to eat with his fingers."

Andrews criticises the jury which convicted him, saying:

"I knew I was innocent from the start. But the injury seemed hard-hearted. Everything was against me, though there was no positive proof that I was the guilty one. Right here I might add that the inefficiency of a jury such as the one that unjustly convicted me was deplorable. Made up in the main of men unfit to pass judgment, who had no conception of establishing my identity and handwriting, their verdict was based solely on the testimony of witnesses, some of whom had seen me from only one to three minutes, but who swore I was the man who passed the checks.

JUDGE WAS FAIR.

"I cannot find fault with Judge Chase. He was eminently fair and gave me the benefit of every doubt."

"The humiliation of it all was terrible. The treatment at Charles street jail is very good. But it is far different at Deer Island. My sympathy goes out to the young man at Deer Island. If he has any inclination to do right again, such inclination is taken from him by the company into which he is thrown. Crime becomes habitual with him. Had I, myself, not been resolute and courageous, I might now have become a confirmed convict.

"The food is one of the worst features there. I am told that the coffee there, for instance, is made up in the proportion of twelve pounds of coffee to 250 gallons of water.

200 PUPILS AT SAUGUS THREATEN STRIKE TOMORROW

New Crisis in Town Affairs as Resignation of School Board Is Demanded.

Two hundred pupils, eighty of whom are in high school, threaten a "strike" in the Saugus High School tomorrow morning following a town meeting last week in which the sentiment of the 300 voters present was largely that the School Board members should resign, and a meeting of the School Board at which uncomplimentary terms were reported to have been used by one member in referring to Charles L. Davis. Following the meeting Davis resigned.

The situation has been intensified by the assertions of Mrs. Charles W. Morse of No. 10 Overlea avenue, East Saugus, that her daughter Mildred, thirteen years old, was seized by the throat by one of the teachers of the Ballard School. The teacher's finger nails left marks upon the throat of her daughter, Mrs. Morse says, and, she continued: "My girl did not recover from the attacks for two days and the night after the attack the child was delirious."

The school strike threatened tomorrow is an outgrowth of the resignation of former High School Principal James F. Butterworth due, it was declared, to the "petticoat rule" of school affairs in Saugus. Women teachers in the high school carried their woes to the School Board which was composed of two men and three women. Following Principal Butterworth's resignation and its acceptance 110 high school children struck for a day.

Roams About Boston Dazed; Gets Typhoid

LAWRENCE, June 13.—Harold Painter, 17, of No. 89 Railroad street, is tonight on the dangerous list at the Lawrence General Hospital suffering from typhoid fever, the result of roaming about the streets of Boston in a dazed condition for two days. Young Painter mysteriously disappeared from his home Wednesday and it was thought that he had committed suicide. The Merrimac River was searched and the police of surrounding towns notified. He was picked up on the streets here Friday morning shortly before daybreak. He is unable to give any account of his wandering and is at a loss to explain how he returned home.

If the thing can be done, the Governor will review the parade at Manchester. In any event, he will spend the late afternoon at Winchendon.

Governor Walsh faces one of his busiest weeks. Flag Day celebrations call him today to Somerville and Saugus. He attends on Tuesday the class day exercises at Boston College, on Wednesday will be at Holy Cross College in Worcester, his old school, and on Thursday goes to Harvard. GOVERNMENT TO AID VICTIMS OF RAILROAD WRECKING IN FIGHT TO RECOVER LOST MILLIONS that they ought to have known better than to plunge their railroad into the reckless and distressful speculations which have cost it such tremendous losses.

Interstate Board Will Recommend Drastic Measures as Result of New Haven Probe

The Interstate Commerce Commission has been, in recent years, earning a reputation as one of the most competent and independent administrative boards in the country. It has been gaining public confidence very rapidly, in sharp contrast with the lack of confidence in which most of our railroad commissions in the States are held. Its decisions carry with them a moral force in the community which many of our courts could justly envy.

Therefore, if this commission recommends that these directors be held LIABLE IN THEIR PERSONAL ESTATES FOR THE LOSSES WHICH HAVE BEEN ENTAILED UPON THE NEW HAVEN RAILROAD THROUGH THEIR ACTS, it may well be considered that this is the beginning of the end of such conduct as has characterized the management of the New Haven Railroad during the last eight years.

Able to Pay for Ruin Wrought

This decision also will be fraught with great consequence to the stockholders. The losses to the railroad will run up into the hundred millions. These directors are all men of tremendous wealth—Morgan, Rockefeller, Ledyard and their confederates—and are amply able to pay the penalties of their own misbehavior.

If the New Haven can recover back this money, it will put that railroad upon its feet again. It will send its stock flying up toward its old values, and enable it once more to pay dividends that it earns. It will mean to thousands of stockholders of the railroad the difference between a comfortable independence and, perhaps, poverty. The AMERICAN correspondent knows of several instances where stockholders, heavily invested in the New Haven, have been reduced from comparative opulence to downright penury.

If the Interstate Commerce Commission preserves its present purpose to make this decision, it will also spell wonders for the general public in New England. It will enable the New Haven Railroad, without increasing its fixed charges through borrowing of money, to give an efficient transportation service, a thing which has been a crying need in New England, and will enable the public to obtain that efficient service without an increase in rates, which New England cannot afford because she is heavily enough penalized in railroad rates by her distance from the sources of supply and centre of population in this country.

Will Mark Railroad Epoch

No more important decision will have been made by any board or court in this country in recent years than this decision, or recommendation, by the great Interstate Commerce Commission, which will stand for all time as a warning to evil-minded directors that they will not have to deal with helpless stockholders and a still more helpless traveling and shipping public, but hereafter must face the power of the national government when they attempt to repeat the disgraceful orgies of the last decade of the New Haven.

Lewis Cass Ledyard spoke more truthfully than he knew when he testified before the commission that on his return from Europe he found a conflagration all around the New Haven. What he really meant was that he found a conflagration all around the New Haven directors.

BAY STATE TO KEEP STRING ON B. & M. STOCK

The Boston & Maine-New Haven separation bill, to be reported to the Legislature by the Committee on Railroads, will conain a clause providing that when the Boston & Maine stock of the New Haven is offered for sale it must carry the proviso that this Commonwealth may purchase the stock at any time.

To two of the fifteen members of the Committee on Railroads—Senator Edward Fisher of Westford and Representative Robert M. Washburn of Worcester—has been delegated the work of drafting a bill which will embody the wishes of at least a majority of the committee.

Senator Fisher and Representative Washburn will sit down to their task tomorrow. Both are attorneys. Fisher is known as one of the "levelheadest" men in the Legislature. Washburn, a brilliant chap and great debater, has lived with the railroad problem ever since the "merger" was first heard of.

BANKERS OBJECT.

The desire of the Railroad Committee appears to be that the Commonwealth shall keep a "string" on the Boston & Maine stock, originally purchased by the New Haven contrary to law.

None of those who are loudest in their demands for a "string," however, will say that the State should at this time, purchase and own a controlling interest in Boston & Maine. Few of them even agree with the Governor, that the time has come when—on the petition of 50,000 voers—the question should be referred to the people. All that is wanted, apparently, is a "string."

The principal objection to the proposed string is advanced by bankers and dealers in railroad securities, who say that such a string will impair the market value of the Boston & Maine stock owned by the New Haven. The New Haven interests, naturally, do not want to lose any more on their Boston & Maine venture than they stand to lose under ordinary circumstances.

Some members of the Legislature feel that bakers and brokers may be unnecessarily disturbed by the suggested impairment of marketibility. One responsible member of the House holds that intelligent investors will be quite as likely to invest in Boston & Maine stock with the proposed State Ownership string on it as they would be without it.

It is also held, by legislators, that it will really make little difference to either the State or the New Haven whether the bill finally adopted carries the Washburn string or does not carry it.

To the suggestion that the Federal Department of Justice may proceed forthwith, if the bill soon to be passed at the State House carries such a string—a string not contemplated in the Washington agreement between the New Haven and the Administration—nobody in the Legislature can return a satisfactory answer.

On the whole, however, nobody expects that such a suit against the New Haven, under the Sherman Act, would throw the New England Railroads into receiverships. A receivership for the New Haven, it is pointed out, is not in any event likely to be due exclusively to New Haven investments in Boston & Maine. The New Haven has invested at least as unwisely in many other directions.

It is felt, on all sides, that a reorganization of the Boston & Maine may not be far away.

Bed Bug Time

Bed Bug Time in New England

It's bed bug time in New England; the people shout and sing.
The air is full of buzzings, and sound sleep has taken wing.
Warm nights and restless tossing is the tired mortal's plight;
While the bed bugs get together, and bite, bite, bite.
When the temperature is soaring, and every one wants to fight,
When the temperature is soaring, and every one wants to fight,
Then comes the pesky bed bugs, to bite, bite, bite.
They have bitten every victim, with all their vicious might,
And will continue to until "Martin's Powders" put them to flight.

P. S.—"Martin's Bed Bug Powders" are non-poisonous, odorless, and quickly applied. They never fail to kill bed bugs and destroy the nits.

WILSON'S FAITH IN HUMAN NATURE SHAKEN, HE SAYS

BIG GREETING AT COLLEGE.

PRINCETON, N. J., June 13.—One of the most glorious alumni days that Princeton has ever celebrated came today when she had her most distinguished graduate, Woodrow Wilson, as her guest of honor.

The President was the lion of old Nassau today and was feted by his class, that of '79, at a banquet tonight following a strenuous day. He participated in a huge alumni parade in which more than 7,000 participated, and incidentally saw Yale defeat Princeton in a baseball game by a score of 3 to 0.

The President left for Washington tonight shortly after 11 o'clock arriving there at 7 o'clock tomorrow morning.

"Hello Tommy," was the favorite greeting of Princetonians toward the President. He was thunderously cheered as he marched with the alumni across the baseball field and joined with the rest in the singing of the old college songs and the "locomotive" yells.

President John Grier Hibben of Princeton gave the President an effusive greeting to the "old town," and many "old grads" were glad to see that friendship between the men had been restored.

President Wilson told his classmates at tonight's banquet that alleged friends have given him a mass of misinformation concerning Mexican matters. This, he declared, has shaken his faith in human nature to a great degree and has made it more difficult to get at the real truth in Mexico.

Patrolman Guilty but Holds No-Pay Job

Mayor Childs of Newton announced last night that Patrolman David J. Nagle, who was found guilty of stealing milk from Lassell Seminary, could have his job back but would be fined his entire salary during his suspension. This is a joke, as Nagle receives no salary. The Board of Aldermen refuses to vote him any salary, declaring that he should never have been put on the force.

NATION TODAY PAYS TRIBUTE TO THE FLAG

Elks to Conduct Series of Exercises, Holding Special Program on the Common.

ORATION BY THE MAYOR

Today the nation celebrates Flag Day, in honor of the adoption of the Stars and Stripes as the national emblem by the Continental Congress on June 14, 1777.

Boston's observance will centre upon impressive exercises conducted by the Boston Lodge of Elks, No. 10, at the Parkman Memorial on Boston Common, beginning at 5 o'clock this afternoon.

The Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks makes a feature of Flag Day observance. Every Elks lodge in the land has its patriotic program today. Those of the larger lodges in the cities are elaborate. Manchester, N. H., lodge honors the anniversary tomorrow with a parade of 30,000 men, with President Wilson looked for as the guest of the day.

In his Flag Day proclamation, Governor Walsh called upon the citizens of Massachusetts to display the Stars and Stripes today. He also recommended that the flag be flown from public buildings. Thousands of Massachusetts homes today will fly the beautiful Stars and Stripes. Governors of other States have issued similar proclamations, with every indication of a loyal response from the people.

EXERCISES ON COMMON

Patriotic selection—Stoneman's military band.

Introduction—William S. McNary, presiding.

There will be a parade of about forty organizations. There will be a flag-raising at Prospect Hill tower, followed by exercises at Central Hall, with Governor Walsh as orator.

4 HURT IN PIER ELEVATOR MISHAP

Electric Controller Refuses to Work on the No. 1 Lift on Commonwealth Wharf.

One of the big freight elevators at the Commonwealth Pier ran amuck yesterday. With four men aboard, it was ascending from the first to the second floor, when the electric controller refused to work.

The elevator proceeded upward toward the roof, and eight feet above the second floor, crashed through the grating at the roof of the shaft. The upper part of the elevator was smashed, the mechanism was jammed and the elevator shaft was shattered.

Of the four men in the car, all were somewhat injured and two were forced to go home, though the other two remained at work. They escaped from the wrecked car by crawling out through the shattered timbers.

Besides the elevator man, the men in the car were Patrick Griffin, Michael Brodrick and Michael Nee. When the elevator struck the grating they were thrown flat on their backs in the car, and so escaped more serious injury, for the top of the car was crushed like the shell of an egg.

Marlboro Stirred by Liquor Fight

Court to Hear Question of Alleged Illegal Location of Two Big Firms.

MARLBORO, June 13.—A sensation was caused today when it was made known by the temperance advocates that the Equity session of the Supreme Court in Boston, on June 23, would hear the question of the legality of the location of Marlboro's two liquor establishments each of which has been in existence for twenty years.

The temperance interests headed by Ralph Whitman maintain that both the saloons are located contrary to the law which prohibits saloon within four hundred feet of a public school. F. S. Rock & Co, and E. P. Burke & Co., the two liquor dealers assert that they will cary the case to the United States courts should the State courts rule against them.

CHURCHMAN IS SUED BY BRIDE FOR ALIENATION

Boston Woman Declares That Strange Friendship Has Broken Up Happy Home.

It is a queer tale that has been brought to light in the suit of Mrs. Helen W. Crawford against Rolan H. Blood, the Pepperell undertaker and church official, for the alienation of the affections of her husband, William P. Crawford.

The story begins a few months ago, when Crawford met Blood in the ordinary course of business, and at once there sprung up a friendship that makes them a modern Damon and Pythias. Remarkable letters thereafter passed regularly between them.

Mrs. Crawford says that the entire nature of her husband changed after he met Blood and from an affectionate husband he became cold, indifferent and neglectful, even to cutting down her allowance and finally asking her to live on two dollars a week.

Crawford would taunt his wife with tales of his friendship for Blood and tell her that Blood had invited him to go to his home in Pepperell and live. He also displayed jewelry and clothing which he said Blood had bought for him.

WOMAN IN SECLUSION.

Mrs. Crawford, who is a strikingly handsome woman of Junoesque figure, is living in the Back Bay district in seclusion. She has been compelled to seek employment. Mrs. Crawford told her story with much reluctance:

"I was married to Mr. Crawford eighteen months ago and lived what to me was an ideal life," said she. "I had the love of a hard-working man and the affection that my nature craved. I did not ask for nor expect diamonds and silks and satins, I wanted my husband and his love, and in his happiness I found my greatest pleasure.

"Everything was lovely until last Winter when he met this man out in Pepperell, and from that date he changed toward me. Shortly after he came home one night wearing his diamond ring which had been in pawn for nearly $200, and I said that business must be exceptionally good, and he answered that it was not, but he had a friend who had taken the ring out of pawn.

"Then he came back from a trip to Pittsfield and was wearing an expensive fur coat. He told me his Pepperell friend had given it to him as he did not wish him to catch cold. Up to this time the letters from Pepperell had been coming to the house, but none came thereafter, they were being sent in care of a Mr. Babbit. I continued to live with my husband and tried in every way to break off the friendship, but I failed. I read some letters I found in his coat which I was mending one day, but I could not understand them.

HAS MANY LETTERS.

When I came to letters in which Blood asked my husband to leave me and spoke of me as "It" and "That," I determined to go to my attorney, Mr. Patten, and see if I could not stop Blood from stealing my husband. The suit is the result and it will be pushed to the end. I have enough letters to support my claim and to substantiate my charges."

Mr. Blood claims that the whole action is one of blackmail and declares that the case will never be pushed to trial. "I can say one thing for sure," said Mr. Blood, "and that is that woman will not get a cent of my money.

"I met Mr. Crawford last December, when he came to my home on business, and I was at once attracted to him for he was so bright and had such a fine personality. A warm friendship followed. Others, too, who met Mr. Crawford admired him greatly. I saw him only five times in my life, but we corresponded from time to time."

DENY BLACKMAIL CHARGE.

H. H. Patten, attorney for Mrs. Crawford, said regarding Blood's charge of blackmail: "I cannot see wherein there is any blackmail in a deserted wife asking the cause of her husband's desertion and neglect to give her monetary return."

This action was taken despite the refusal of the New York State authorities to agree to such an agreement. The Supreme Court is considering this request in connection with the application for bail, and is expected to announce a decision on Monday.

CHILDREN BLOCK WEDDING PLANS

"It's All Off," Said Widow with Seven Children, According to Widower with Five.

After spending two weeks making preparations for his wedding to Mrs. Lena Welsh, a Malden widow, John F. Lawler learned yesterday that the engagement was broken and their marriage would not take place today as planned. Lawler blames one of Mrs. Welsh's seven children. He is a widower and has five children himself.

Everything went smoothly, Lawler says, until his bride-to-be told him it was "all off." She would not give any reason for her decision, Lawler says.

Lawler had hired a band and engaged an awning company to place coverings about his prospective bride's grounds at No. 143 Commercial street, Malden, so that none of the guests would be bothered by the sun's rays. According to one of Lawler's most intimate friends there was to be an African dodger among the attractions to divert the wedding guests.

SEEK PROBE OF WAKEFIELD STRIKE

Merchants Hard ,Hit By Factory Shutdown Ask Aid of State Board.

The Wakefield business men will confer with the State Board of Arbitration and Conciliation the first of this week and urge them to again come to town and reopen the investigation of the Heywood Bros. strike.

The closing of the rattan factory has been a severe blow to the merchants of the town, it being estimated that the great majority of the $11,000 payroll was spent by the employes in the local stores.

With hope abandored that the company will resume business in the near future, the 600 strikers have settled down for a long siege and are making active preparations to weather the hardships incident to enforced idleness. Many of the men are looking for work in and out of town, while the leaders of the strikers are planning tag days and entertainments and the town hall has been secured for a minstrel performance, to be given by the boys' club of St. Joseph's Church on June 22.

BANDITS CHASED ALONG MERRIMAC

Armed Posses Beat Woods for Quartet That Robbed Reed's Ferry Postoffice.

MANCHESTER, N. H., June 13.—Pursuit of the four burglars who robbed the postoffice at Reed's Ferry early today centered between the villagers of Litchfield and Hudson on the east side of the Merrimack River.

The quartet rowed across the river from Reed's Ferry to Litchfield when fleeing from the Manchester police auto, laden with armed officers.

After daybreak word of the presence of suspicious strangers along the country roads spread through Litchfield, and then to Hudson, as the quartet seemed to be working south.

Posses of armed citizens from both villages assembled and began to beat up the roads and wooded territory. As the burglars were known to be armed, resolute men, the citizens agreed to take no chances, if they came upon the gang, but to shoot at the first sign of resistance.

This gang held up Special Officer Charles Moody and Joseph Descateau of Reed's Ferry, four miles below here, blew the safe in the village post office six times with dynamite.

The head of one of the greatest steel mills in America walked into a Studebaker store last week and said: "Send me out a Studebaker SIX. Studebakers are the hardest people in the automobile business to satisfy on steels. Judging by their chemical, metallurgical, and physical tests, this must be the best "Six" in the world".

Studebaker

Economical Light-Weight
SIX
$1575

One of the reasons why Studebakers are the hardest people in the automobile business to satisfy on steels is this:

In no other way than by heat treatment of steels can the strength of a "SIX" be greatly increased while the weight is being decreased.

In no other way than by the scientific distribution of this weight through intensive manufacturing can that balance be secured which results in the superb roadability of the Studebaker SIX.

And the important thing for you to remember is that the Studebaker SIX stands absolutely alone among light "Sixes" in the application of manufacturing methods without which light-weight, strength, balance and roadability are impossible.

How Studebaker SIX Superiority Shows Itself

The Studebaker SIX will glide silently from a standing start on high into a forty mile gait, in a distance of less than 200 yards.

The Studebaker SIX when it is skimming along at a high rate of speed will actually seem to you—from the lack of effort and vibration—to be going at a rate ten miles per hour less.

The Studebaker SIX will stick to a straight line with scarcely a touch on the steering wheel, mile after mile and hour after hour—while other "Sixes" are constantly creeping to one side or the other, and being coaxed back.

The Studebaker SIX will take steeper hills and more of them, on high, than any other "Six" it meets in a day's run.

The Studebaker SIX is not merely motor-silent, but silent all over—the transmission on the rear axle, in addition to its other advantages, contributing to that result.

STUDEBAKER
Detroit

The difference between a brand-new manufactured Studebaker SIX and a brand-new assembled or semi-manufactured "Six" is immediately apparent in the superior way in which the Studebaker holds the road. And that difference grows more marked month after month. It culminates tragically, in a second-hand sale of the non-manufactured "Six" at a terrific depreciation.

The Studebaker FOUR is characterized by the same manufacturing excellence and quality of material as the Studebaker SIX.

LAWMAKERS OF 1884 GATHER IN HAPPY REUNION

Republic Is Proclaimed in the Towns Along the Adriatic.

NOTABLES RECALL BYGONES

Quite a lot of the fellows who, thirty years ago, applauded the first Mrs. Nat Goodwin, at the Park Theatre, gathered around the mahogany yesterday, at the Exchange Club, to resolve that, ing all the time, there has never while the world may be improvbeen a finer body assembled on Beacon Hill than the House of Representatives of 1884.

There were a lot of them missing when Secretary "Joe" Burdett arose to call the roll, but sixty of them were "present and voting" and among the sixty, a considerable number whose names are as well known as any others in Massachusetts.

"Representative" William L. Douglas—who afterwards became Governor—sent his best wishes, with the less cheerful news that his physician had ordered him to stay at home.

But Former-Governor J. Q. A. Brackett was there, Justices John H. Hardy and Lloyd E. White of the Superior Court, Judge M. J. Creed of the Municipal Court, Former-Mayor John H. Woods of Somerville, Former-Senate President George E. Smith, Publisher John C. Milne of the Fall River News, Former-Senator Prentiss Cummings and Former-Congressman Joseph H. O'Neil.

HOST OF NOTABLES.

And President William A. Bancroft of the "L," Horace G. Wadlin of the Boston Public Library, Secretary J. Warren Bailey of the Prison Commission, City Clerk "Smiling Jim" Donovan, Chairman John R. Murphy of the Finance Commission, former Senator Fred H. Williams, and loads and loads almost equally well known.

And "shucks," they said, "things were about the same in '84; there is really nothing new!"

Railroad problems? New Year's Day in '84 brought with it the announcement that the District Court had named Charles P. Clark as receiver for the property of the New York and New England Railroad.

Labor? One member of the House in 1884 introduced a bill "to extend and regulate the liability of employers to make compensation for personal injuries suffered by employes in their service."

What was that, but the Workmen's Compensation Act of today?

The Governor, George D. Robinson, talked in his inaugural, as they have talked ever since, of the "needless multiplication of boards and commissions." He recommended "biennial elections," too! He declined to give ear to those who urged the dismissal of the board of nine members who looked after health, lunacy and charity, because he felt, as Governor Walsh feels, that one board was better than many.

ALAS! NOTHING NEW.

Transportation problems? Twenty-five thousand people petitioned the Legislature for an elevated railroad!

Scandal? An investigation was made of the charge that money had been used to help "water-gas" legislation as opposed to coal gas.

Also, the old boys recalled that that was the year the salary of lawmakers was raised to $650 and that Representative John R. Murphy of Charlestown—he of the "Fin. Com." of today—was the boy who fought it through for them.

It was the consensus of opinion, however, that the "show business" was much better in these days and that legislators had more fun in the evening. That very Winter they all say John McCullough in "Virginius" (whisper: Viola Allen was in the company!) Henry Dixey, Sol Smith Russell, James A. Hearne, Louis Aldrich, Joe Jefferson and J. K. Emmett.

Also, P. T. Barnum brought "Jumbo" to town, and the roller skating craze was at its height.

None of the lawmakers of thirty years ago felt like going back, they said, but they all declared that 1884 was "some year."

Sergeant Dalton of New York took Hickey to New York on the 1.05 p. m. train. Hickey was handcuffed to Kenneth D. Douglas.

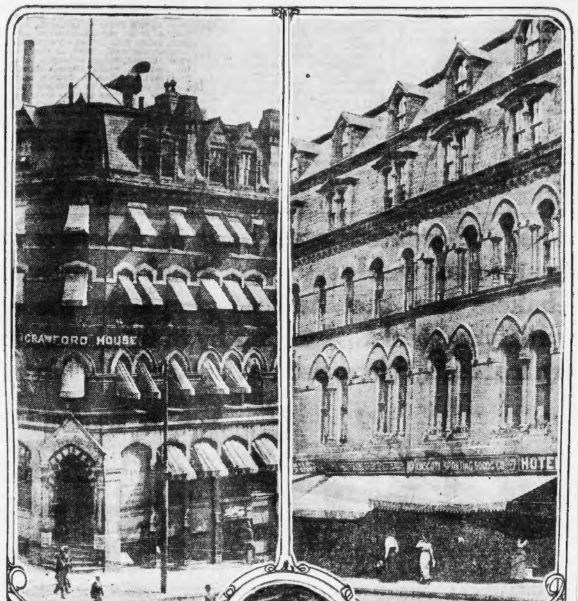
Crawford House 'Splits' on Liquor Rock

◆

Famous Hotel Under Two Managements

◆

Veteran George Rimbach and Son Clash



MAIN HOTEL AND MANAGER RIMBACH; RIGHT, ANNEX, RUN BY FATHER

Boston's Crawford House, one of the oldest and most famous hotels in New England, is "split in two" through differences of opinion between George C. Rimbach, for forty-two years connected with the hotel, and Charles Milford Rimbach, his son. Today the hotel is under two managements, the father managing one section and the son, Charles, the other.

To make the division absolute the covered bridgeway, which for years afforded access from the main hotel to the annex has been locked, barred and bolted and a subway connection through which supplies have been transferred from one part of the structure to the other, is closed.

The situation is said to be one without precedent in the history of New England hotels.

George Rimbach, now proprietor of the Crawford Chambers, with an entrance at No. 5 Hanover street, admits that differences between himself and his son Charles over the liquor question caused the partitioning off of the hotel into two sections. Following the sealing up of the huge iron doorway between the main hotel and the annex, now the Chambers, George Rimbach was obliged to construct a new stairway just at the annex entrance to the covered passageway in order to reach the upper floors of his part.

The carpets have ben torn up along the passageway, chairs piled along the walls and what was one of the essential adjuncts for conveyance of the Crawford House guests is now a blocked and jammed hallway. In discussing the situation yesterday George Rimbach said:

"I have been here at the Crawford House for forty-two years and I have not been opposed to the proper sale of liquor for the convenience of guests. But I have taken exception to my son's idea of how liquor should be dispensed with the result that I shall remain here. He is manager in the main building."

George Rimbach has fifty-six rooms in the Crawford Chambers, while his son's part contains 130 rooms in all. About 100 guests can be accommodated on one side and 200 guests in the Crawford Hotel division.

George Rimbach has now taken the stand that liquor should not be sold, and while the Crawford House dispenses liquor according to the licenses which it holds, no liquor is served in the annex.

The division between father and son had its beginning when the Crawford House went into bankruptcy in 1912, and was placed in the hands of Charles Milford Rimbach as receiver.

In the reorganization Joseph Gahm, bottler for the Schlitz beer in New England, offered to finance the hotel to the extent of $25,000, and Charles Milford Rimbach was made manager of the hotel.

George, the father, refused to continue in the proprietorship under the conditions which he considered intolerable. Last week the difference between father and son came to a climax when the covered passageway was closed and bolted up and the father became proprietor of the newly named Crawford Chambers.

The Crawford House was started in 1865, when Henry Stumcke, uncle of George Rimbach, and Henry Goodwin, known now as the dean of hotel proprietors, started a restaurant on Brattle street.

They built up the Crawford House and remained partners until the death of Stumcke in 1886. The Carleton House, now the division of the hotel run by George Rimbach, was next made an annex of the hotel, and George Rimbach was taken into the partnership two years later, in 1889.

Mr. Goodwin, who is now eighty years old, is proprietor with H. R. Barow of the Rockledge Hotel at Popham Beach. He resides in the Hanover street division of the Crawford House, much interested in the curious situation that has divided the house against itself.

The Hotel Crawford property is owned by the National Securities Bank through a deal in 1902 (February 27) whereby President Batt of the bank paid $300,000 to Harvard College for the property. The lease upon the property is for ninety-nine years and expires in 1918.

About a century ago the then owner of the property, Harvard College, granted a lease of the premises at the nominal rental of three barley corns a year.

ADVENTISTS GET ALONG WITHOUT RINGING OF BELL

Services Go On as Usual Although "Clang-Clang" Is Silenced By Police.

Although their rising bell has been silenced by edict of the police, the attendants at the camp-meeting of the Seventh Day Adventists at the Allston Golf Club grounds were at the early services yesterday, which opened the Sabbath of that sect.

The bell, of huge locomotive type, hangs between two high beams, and was formerly rung for rising, meals and retiring. Residents of Commonwealth avenue apartment houses near the grounds complained that the ringing of the bell, which could be heard for a considerable distance, interfered with their morning sleeps, and the police requested those in charge to arrange a different method of signalling.

Residents of the encampment rose at 5:30 yesterday morning and at 6 o'clock attended devotional services. At 10 o'clock the Sabbath school was held, followed by a revival service. The sermon was preached by Elder R. D. Quinn of South Lancaster, president of the Atlantic Union Conference. Another sermon was preached during the afternoon.

During the encampment the campers in the 125 tents have entirely eschewed meats, tea and coffee, living principally on vegetables, served in a variety of forms by the chefs in the large dining pavilion. The order of the day has been strict, rising at 5:30, devotions at 6, breakfast at 7:15, with young peoples' meetings following.

10,000 SOLDIERS TO QUELL STRIKE RIOTS IN ITALY

Republic Is Proclaimed in the Towns Along the Adriatic.

ROME, June 13.—Premier Salandra announced in the Chamber of Deputies today that 10,000 troops would be concentrated in the disturbed districts to suppress with a stern hand the revolutionary movement growing out of the railway strike. Battles between troops and rioters have occurred in many parts of Italy today.

The proclamation of an Italian republic by the people of several towns bordering on the Adriatic, in Northeastern Italy, is reported.

In some towns, like Fabriano and Rimini, scenes similar to those of the French revolution, were enacted. The inhabitants, misled by reports issued from the headquarters of the anarchist committee at Ancona, an important seaport on the Adriatic, to the effect that a revolutionary movement had been successful in overthrowing the monarchy, proclaimed a republic and substituted for the national flag the black banner of the Peasants' League.

At Naples residents of the working class quartered in the vicinity of the Porta Capuana showered heavy volleys of stones, mixed occasionally with revolver shots, on the troops. The troops retaliated and two of the rioters were killed and many wounded. Twenty-three policemen and thirteen carabineers were wounded.

Republicans, Socialists and Anarchists, who in the past had fought each other vehemently, united today in a riotous campaign against the government at Ravenna until reinforcements of troops drove the leaders into the Republican, Socialist and Labor Exchange, where they are now beseiged.

Simultaneously a reign of vandalism was begun. The rioters invaded the Church of St. Mary of Suffrage, destroying the sacred objects and stealing the pictures and alms boxes. They removed the confessionals, benches and pulpit and with them formed a barricade across the street, filling in the open spaces with chairs, statues, candlesticks and crucifixes.

Another mob invaded the Constitutional Club, where the orgy of destruction was continued. The furniture was used to build another barricade, on top of which the national flag was burned.

Cavalry and infantry with fixed bayonets attacked the barricade in the face of volleys of stones, tiles, lamps and other missiles, while the rioters shouted "Long live the revolution!" "Long live the social republic!" and Long live anarchy!"

The soldiers, on the third charge, dispersed the revolutionists, who took refuge in the Labor Exchange.

In the meanwhile another band tried to force its way into the palace of the prefect of police. The chief of police attempted to parley with the rioters but was struck on the head with a hammer and died soon afterward in a hospital. The troops again charged and fired on the mob, which finally was dispersed.

Strikers at Andria fired at a workman who refused to join them, but missed him and killed a fellow striker. Another striker injured in the course of a demonstration died today from his wounds.

Along the railroad line between Cringnola and Barletta, the telegraph and telephone wires have been cut.

Detachments of troops were ordered today to take over the control of the railroad station and tracks in Rome in consequence of the threats of the employes to begin a general railroad strike throughout Italy.

GENTLEMAN SEEKING WIFE TO HELP HIM GET AN EDUCATION

Ladies, this is Elias Segundo Ferreyra of Argentina.

Olive N. Forbes to Marry H. O. Tilton

The engagement of Miss Olive Northrop Fobes of Lexington, a Smith College graduate, class of 1909, to Henry Odin Tilton, Harvard '04, and Ph. D. 1912, was announced by Miss Fobes at the reunion banquet of her class in Northampton yesterday.

After falling fifty feet and landing on the back of a horse, two-year-old Sillimon Hamilton of No. 497 Washington street, Lynn, romped about with his companions, as though nothing unusual had happened. The child was leaning out the window on the third floor of the house and he lost his balance and fell.

SEEKS HARVARD EDUCATION AND WOULD MARRY

Gentleman from Argentina Wants Wife With Money; Beauty Doesn't Count.

> FOREIGN GENTLEMAN—Needing pecuniary help in order to pursue his career in Harvard University, would marry a reliable lady. Write giving references, to E. S. FERREYRA, Gen. Delivery, Boston, Mass.

WANTED—A wife.

That's just what Elias Segundo Ferreyra says he wants—a wife. And the reason he gives is—not mere love or any other reason that usually actuates a man on a similar quest—HARVARD.

Yes, Ferreyra's reason is just Harvard.

Ferreyra says he wants a wife to help him go through Harvard. He is lacking on the financial end, so that a wife who could give him "pecuniary help" in his fight for an education would come in handy, he declares.

She need not be rich. He will be satisfied if her means are just moderate, but if she is wealthy, why, Ferreyra should worry.

According to the wife-seeker's story, he has come all the way up from Argentina to go to Harvard. He wants to enter next Fall, so to make sure that he will have the necessary funds he wants to wed a bride—with money. He says that beauty isn't the question at all.

"Reliable is the word," explains Ferreyra. "I want HER to be reliable. I don't care if she is beautiful or homely, or stout or thin. I just want a womanly woman with some means. I can assue her of getting a good, congenial husband. I'm not at all hard to get along with.

"I have found it rather hard to get a job. I would like to teach. I know Spanish and Italian fluently. I have been here only two weeks and being a stranger has made it difficult for me so far.

"I am thirty-five years old, five feet ten inches in height, weigh 170 pounds and am ambitious. I am already a Bachelor of Arts and all I want now is to finish off my education at Harvard.

"Love?" Well, that'll be sure to come after I meet her."

NEARLY NEW.

Persons who live at No. 180 Arlington street [illegible] told an AMERICAN reporter that Mrs. Manoogian was in a highly nervous state during the last few weeks of her stay in this country, but they paid little attention to it, believing that she was anxious to get back to her home in the old country.

At the present time the authorities are unable to tell whether the murder was committed by one or more persons. On the body were found two deep stab wounds near the heart, either of which would have caused death.

Chicago Protest Raises World-Wide Style Storm

HOLD POSITIVE VIEWS ON STYLES FOR WOMEN

PARIS CONDEMNED.

Mrs. W[illegible] that the present [illegible] be condemned. The [illegible] who create the style [illegible] They were [illegible] styles for women of [illegible] and their impossible [illegible] respectable people [illegible] Paris describe the [illegible] of fashion there as [illegible] at the clubwomen's [illegible] of 1914 styles for women.

The [illegible] was taken up in New York. The women of the metropolis [illegible] And the Boston women [illegible] offer all sorts of [illegible] for [illegible] against the present fashions.

Probably the most severe condemnation [illegible] by Mrs. Chapin. She [illegible] progressive movement [illegible] Tuesday on the Mauretania to speak at New Thought conferences in London and Edinboro. She has been often asked by friends to design a woman's costume, which shall be smart, artistic and at the same time modest.

Of the present styles, Mrs. Chapin said yesterday:

"The present mode of dress tends to degeneracy and should be stopped. It's bad absolutely [illegible] and corrupts the morals of both men and women. There are so many people trying to uplift and better humanity that it seems a pity all their efforts should be blasted by the present style of dress, which is a barrier to all spiritual uplift.

"There is no art in the exposition of the form as the present style exposes it, and it's not done with any idea of art. We should try to get back to the Greek idea of dress. I believe the human form is divine and as such should be reverenced, not only by the woman herself but should call out reverence from men always. A woman lowers her womanhood when she goes on a public street or in private with the gowns many are wearing today.

"A dress should be fashioned which would drape the figure without exposing the form so blatantly as do the present styles.

"As it is now men are batted in the face with 'female' every time they meet a woman. This all in time tends to animalism and materialism and in a way indicates the materialism of the times."

NOTHING IMMODEST.

But other Boston women of note give the following opinions:

Dr. Eliza B. Cahill, Hotel Westminster, president Professional Women's Club:

"There is absolutely nothing immodest in the present day mode of dress. In fact, it's the best method we have ever adopted, with its small amount of material and easy, graceful lines. Naturally, if any style is [illegible] exaggerated it takes away from the effect and there always will be women who will wear their skirts too low or their skirts too tight while they are tight at all or low at all. Too long a split in the skirt, which reveals the limbs, or skirts too tight ARE vulgar, but the present day style doesn't call for that and only a few foolish women who like to exaggerate are guilty of wearing them that way."

VERY CONVENIENT.

Baroness Rose Posse, physical culturist:

"I don't think the present day mode of dress is immodest, but it is decidedly extreme and inconvenient. We have, in fact, gone to such extremes now that it will be but a short while before the pendulum swings back and we will again be wearing simpler, saner clothes. The present mode of dress is grotesque, not artistic and a revolt must [illegible] We have gone about as far [illegible] possible to go along those lines.

"The large waist line of the present [illegible] thing commendable [illegible] that gives the women more freedom [illegible] to breathe. I don't think we will ever [illegible] to go back to the small waist lines."

Mr. Rodgers, an African missionary, told the chief in leaving that he would bring back with him a bride [illegible] expected to pass the honeymoon among them. This delighted the [illegible] very much and he promised the missionary that when he came back he would have the inhabitants of fifteen cannibal villages out to meet him and his young bride.

TO RECLAIM CHILDREN.

Mr. Rodgers has done wonderful work among the children of the cannibals, who attend his schools and have given up feasting on human beings. The old people find it hard to abandon the old customs, but they [illegible] very highly of the missionary [illegible] highly that they want him to live [illegible] and happy and will make the honeymoon of the couple one of the [illegible] in the African forest. "I feel as if I knew these people, for I have heard so much about them," said Mrs. Rodgers. "I have asked about them and especially about the cannibals' children, where the most important work will be done.

"I know that they will give us a royal welcome. My husband has been very popular among them. He has helped in doing a great work among the children and young women.

PLANS SCHOOL WORK.

"We want to save the young people from being eaten by their relatives. I shall assist in the schools, in the industrial work and in the religious work as well. It seems strange to live among these people. I've never been away from home for any length of time and now everything will seem so strange to me. But I am going to raise these people up and you might as well make yourself useful among the cannibals as among the heathen at home."

DEMAND SLAYER OF PEASLEE BE JAILED

Public Opinion Is Running Hig and Results in Renewal o Search for Person Who Sho Down Toymaker of Hennike

Victim of Crime Slept Alone and Always Ate Cold Dinners, Sometimes Eating His Meals on the Steps; Refused to Join Family

By BERT FORD.

HENNIKER, N. H., June 13.—As a hermit Howard W. Peaslee was in a class by himself.

The hermit of fancy is a man who shuns society and seeks the seclusion of a mountain cavern or forest fastnesses, but Peaslee showed an originality almost romantic in his method.

He set up his hermitage across the road from the farmhouse where live his wife and children. From the windows of his tool shed "home," Peaslee could see his grandson Raymond, sporting in the door yard with a puppy, for all the world like a bear. He could see the members of the household engaged in daily routine after his [illegible].

Breakfast and supper he took under the family roof, for years in silence at the family board, but for nearly a year before his death he ate in the kitchen by himself or on the door step. For some reason even members of this strange household cannot explain, he always insisted that his dinner be served cold in a tin pail and delivered to his hermit [illegible] across the way. This midday rule applied to Thanksgiving and Christmas the same as to all other days in the year.

Peaslee was the toy-maker whose murder, now a twenty-three-day mystery, has thrust into public view the skeletons of a proud Quaker family that have made honest country folk gasp and gossip. His death has revealed a domestic tangle, melodramatic in its complications.

DOESN'T CLEAR MYSTERY.

"Silent" Gene Wood has been arrested for the crime, but his arrest has not satisfied a doubt that is bound to fasten the guilt on a person in a quarter entirely unexpected. A sensation is in store.

Prominent citizens, backed by the selectmen, demanded greater vigilance following the revelations about the secret sale of timber from the North Weare wood lot. They complained to the office of the Attorney-General that the arrest of Wood far from solved the mystery. They had learned of other suspects with stronger motive, at least two of whom had better opportunity.

Chief Clifford B. Hildreth of the Manchester police force was dispatched to the scene with instructions to proceed as if nobody had been arrested. Most murder cases flatten out after the arrest of a suspect, until the trial, but interest in the Quaker mystery suddenly revived after the Sunday AMERICAN pointed out that financial matters instead of the flimsy motive of jealousy was the real incentive for the crime. All the most improved methods for running down the assassin are now being applied by Chief Hildreth, who in spite of his sixty-seven years is still very much in the ring and as big a menace to law-breakers as he was fifty years ago.

It is the opinion here that if the murder of Charles Manley, last March, had been properly investigated, Howard Peaslee might be alive today. It is said Peaslee's slayer found courage in the exhibition made in the Manley case and felt he could elude the law just as easily.

DEMAND PUNISHMENT.

That is why feeling is keyed so high. That is why Henry Emerson, paper manufacturer and richest man in town, who gave a wooden block to the Odd Fellows, declared the other afternoon that he would not take any further interest in the town or its affairs unless the slayer of Howard Peaslee is brought to justice.

Others join in a ringing amen. So the death of the Quaker hermit is being probed with a vigor that may result in the exoneration of Wood. Attorney Joseph Donigan, counsel for the imprisoned suspect, makes this prediction.

Opera Benefit to Aid Victims of Shipwreck

Boston Singers in Paris Plan Gala Performance This Week.

PARIS, June 13.—The Boston Opera Company this week gave a charity performance of "La Boheme" at the Opera Comique, Mme. Melba being Mimi.

Next week it gives a gala performance of "Ballo in Maschero" and "The Secret of Suzanna" for victims of the Empress of Ireland disaster.

A strong Italo-American cast will include Felice Lyne, who booked passage on the ill-fated liner but sailed [illegible] because she had been requested to hasten to Paris by Manager Henry Russell.

Detectives Still Hunt $75,000 Hanan Gems

Wealthy New Yorker and Wife Leav Paris for Evian.

PARIS, June [illegible].—Mr. and Mrs. John H. Hanan of No. 1073 Fifth avenue, New York, have gone to Evian, where Mrs. Hanan will take the cure, later joining their yacht [illegible] in British waters for a cruise in the North Sea and the Kiel and Cowes regattas.

Mrs. Hanan told the I. N. S. correspondent that no trace has been found of the $75,000 jewels stolen from her months ago in her cottage, Shore Acres, at Narragansett Pier, despite reports to the contrary.

Three detective agencies have been at work on the robbery for nearly a year.

King George to Visit Overseas Dominions

Monarch Plans Trip to Canada, Australia and South Africa.

LONDON, June 13.—Ever since the King's accession it has been generally understood at court that the King and Queen would, at the earliest opportunity, make a tour of the oversea dominions.

His Majesty has, indeed, promised both the Australian and South African government that he would do this, and now the visit is expected to take place in the Autumn or early Winter of next year, the route being out by the Cape and home through Canada. The Colonial Office and the government of the dominions have already discussed the details.

Thought Governor Was "Movies" Idol

"Ringer" for Actor, Declared Prince Schoolboy, Who Had Guessed Wrong.

At least one Bostonian thinks so.

When the Governor recently made that memorable trip to the Prince School, he entered one of the classrooms. Before the teacher could introduce him, the Governor put this query to the pupils:

"Which of you knows my name?"

One youngster down at the back of the room shot his hand into the air, snapped his fingers and fairly shouted:

"Yes, sir, I know."

"Well, who am I, then?" asked the Governor.

"King Baggot," triumphantly exclaimed the boy.

In a jiffy the lad's smile changed to a sheepish fadeaway look when a score of other pupils jumped up saying:

"It's the Governor."

"Well," said the sad-faced lad, "he certainly is a dead ringer for the 'movie actor.'"

RUSSIAN PRINCE, CZAR'S GUARD, TO WED ANNA HELD

Paul Naklianoff Buys American Actress $18,000 Pearl Necklace and Automobile.

Special Cable to Boston American.

PARIS, June 13.—The gilded doors of the exclusive European courts will be thrown open to yet another American actress when Prince Paul Naklianoff of Russia, a member of the Czar's bodyguard, leads to the altar Miss Anna Held.

The courtship of the Prince, who is a handsome young guardsman and a fellow student of the Grand Duke Cyril, is the talk of Paris. He is showering magnificent gifts upon the actress with whom he is madly infatuated and is urging her to name the day immediately.

"But," said Miss Held today, "I don't believe in hasty marriages. Courtship is everything to a woman and she likes to protract it as long as possible. The report of the Prince's attention to me is quite true, but I had rather no notice were taken of it just now, because nothing is really settled. There is a flirtation; yes, and everybody knows how nice flirtations are. Of course, the Prince, man-like, is for a hurried wedding. Look at this," and she carefully lifted from a jewel case a superb necklace which the Prince this week presented to her. "It cost $180,000," she said. "The middle and largest pearl, which is of the finest Oriental quality, with pink, blue and white scintillations, is alone worth $16,000."

Miss Held lives in the Faubourg Saint Honore, immediately opposite the presidential palace. Hither came eight different jewelers to show the Prince Naklianoff and herself as many different necklaces. Each jeweler was ushered into a room apart from the others, and all were mystified by the movements of the actress, who took each necklace in turn to compare it with the rest in her own boudoir.

"They were puzzled, suspicious and jealous," she said. "It was as good as a play. But in that way I believe I got the finest necklace of its size in Europe. Prior to hitting upon that device, the Prince and myself spent three weeks ransacking the Rue de la Paix."

In addition to this gift, the Prince this week ordered for the actress the finest automobile it is possible to find in Paris. It is to be a powerful touring car, fitted up as a boudoir on wheels. It is in this vehicle that the Prince and his bride will rush through Europe on a high-speed honeymoon.

After the marriage, the actress plans to renounce the stage and enter society, though in any case she will probably go to America next season to appear in a new musical comedy which Klaw & Erlanger now are having written for her.

Meanwhile Miss Held made her tentative debut as a society hostess this week when she gave a reception which was attended by several titled Russians and a large number of notables of the French artistic world.

Another Zeppelin Airship Wrecked

DIEDENHOFEN, Germany, June 13.—Another of the Zeppelin airships of the German army, the "Z I," was badly wrecked near here today. While [illegible] to effect an emergency landing the cruiser broke at right angles [illegible] the rear gondola. A lieutenant was injured.

"Apostle of National Concession and Contraction."

The Democrats in Washington, aided by a small clique of railroad Republicans, have surrendered the rights of American citizens in the Panama Canal.

They have not merely abandoned a measure for the benefit of American shipping, but they have surrendered the independent action of this country, and in all probability the fundamental rights of this country in the greatest and most important achievement of modern times.

If this country had been defeated in a disastrous war, it could not have been expected to make a more humiliating surrender of independent action and valuable rights than the Democratic administration in Washington has made at the mere suggestion of England and Japan.

The surrender of the canal is a national disaster, and the party which made that surrender is a continual menace to the honor and dignity of the United States and to the welfare of our citizens.

This Democratic party, for the country's good, for the common good of the citizens, must be deposed from power and deprived of its opportunities for further injuring and disgracing the nation.

Our citizens who consider patriotism above partisanship, who think more of the welfare of their country than they do of the advantage of any party, should unite to depose the Democratic party from power and to whip its traitorous representatives out of the House of Representatives and out of the Senate of the United States at the next election.

It is not merely President Wilson who has refused to follow the declarations of the Democratic platform and to supply the country with the adequate navy which that document demanded. The Democratic party has followed humbly and cravenly at the heels of the President.

It is not merely President Wilson who has repudiated the Democratic doctrine of reciprocity, a doctrine which would have compensated for the invasion of our markets at home by the opening of reciprocal markets to our products abroad. The Democratic party has selfishly and slavishly followed in the Wilson wake for such crumbs of patronage as he has thrown its members.

It is not merely President Wilson who is responsible for the autocratic rejection of an Act of Congress providing for preferential duties in favor of products imported into this country in American ships. The Democratic party has timidly and subserviently permitted Wilson to be an autocrat and to dictate its policies for a payment of patronage.

It is not merely President Wilson who has neglected his duties and the declarations of the Democratic platform in regard to the protection of the lives and the honor of our citizens in Mexico. The Democratic party has endorsed every dishonor and approved every disgrace.

It is the Democratic party which should be punished and repudiated.

It is the unfaithful Democratic members of the House of Representatives and the traitorous Senators who should be expelled from office.

There is no national recall in this country, and it is not possible to remove President Wilson until the end of his four years' term. But it will be possible to remove the Democrats in Congress and to deprive the Democratic party of control of the government in the election which occurs in November of this year.

The election of this year will not be a party matter. It will be a patriotic matter.

It will be the duty of loyal American citizens to consider only the welfare of our people and our country, and to remove a party which is a menace to national prosperity and progress.

There should be no division among the people on minor matters, to endanger the outcome of the Fall election.

There should be unity among all patriotic citizens, a determination to prevent any further injury and humiliation to the nation, and a hope that there is still time to prevent the abandonment of the Philippines or any other disastrous act of Democratic disloyalty and stupidity.

There is no limit to the injury that the Democratic party might inflict upon this country if it were returned to power with any sort of endorsement of its dangerous and disloyal acts. The country must be rescued from such possible injury and the injury already inflicted must be repaired as far as it is possible to do so.

Prosperity must be restored to our people. Our prestige must be renewed and our national rights and privileges regained.

The men named to oppose the disloyal Democrats this Fall must be worthy of so great and so patriotic a task.

They must be elected overwhelmingly, not only as a rebuke to a traitorous Democracy, but as a benefit to our beloved country.

GREAT FUTURE FOR OPERETTA IF ORIGINAL AND FULL OF MELODY, SAYS FRANZ LEHAR

"A Form by Itself," So Declares the Famous Composer, "The Principal Consideration of Success Being That Book and Music Are Born of the Same Spirit"—He Cites the Case of Wagner and Offenbach

"BY MODERNISM WE UNDERSTAND THE EXPRESSION OF THE AGE"

By Franz Lehar,

Composer of "The Merry Widow" and other well-known light operas.

VIENNA, June 13.—A strange combination: Richard Wagner and Jacques Offenbach. And yet the two names are scarcely to be parted. At a time when one of the greatest Germans who ever lived, the greatest artist of the nineteenth century, worked in misery and sorrow, Jacques Offenbach achieved triumph upon triumph.

Richard Wagner's fiery temper, ever leading to eruptions, also caused an explosion in the Offenbach case, which, however, we are inclined to regard as the cry of distress of a mortified person rather than as the well-grounded outbreak of a conviction.

In Wagner's writings we read: "When I offered the Vienna management to write a new work specially for Vienna, with particular attention to the company and capacity of the theatre, I received the deliberate answer that for the present the name of 'Wagner' had been sufficiently regarded, and it was thought well to let another composer have a chance." This other was Jacques Offenbach, of whom at the time there was actually another new work ordered for Vienna.

Wagner may well have considered all his artistic endeavors in vain when he saw Jacques Offenbach comfortably rolling in popular favor.

To be sure, it was a crying injustice to play Wagner against Offenbach. It is not difficult to understand Wagner's mortification. But who would subscribe to his comparing (as he did) one of the most brilliantly gifted of men with a dunghill?

Are we, the descendants, not of one mind, that Offenbach was nothing else than the genial counterpart of the gigantic tragedian Wagner? No reasonable person will today deny the originality of Offenbach's talent, his well-nigh inexhaustible, genuine and original invention.

Wagner Versus Offenbach.

It seemed essential to me to point to the case Wagner versus Offenbach, for matters went on later in the same vein, only that times and persons changed. Before me lies an article written a decade and a half ago. In this I read: "What a classic Jacques Offenbach is, the founder of the operetta, in comparison to the operetta makers of the present day!"

In an epoch, therefore, in which Johann Strauss was reviled, Offenbach had already advanced to a classic. I could cite many other things to prove that what has passed is always praised and what exists slandered. But I omit doing this, for I am still a contemporary and prefer to comfort myself with the thought that at some time I shall perhaps find the appreciation which is now from many a side withheld.

I say, from many a side, for, fortunately, I have no reason to complain. I have always found the public on my side. I compose, urged on by an inner impulse and by no means, as various critics assume, to make money. To reject it would, in the first place, be impossible, and in the second place would presuppose a heroism which even the most envious of opponents might fail to comprehend.

Whether the operetta, as it at present exists, marks progress compared with the creations of a Strauss, Tuppe or Millocker it is not for me to decide. Certain it is, however, that endeavors to reform are present on my side as well as on that of other operetta composers. By modernism we understand the expression of the age. In this sense of the term Offenbach was modern fifty years ago, and Strauss, Tuppe and Millocker were so in their time. We, as contemporaries, have but the task to take from our predecessors what might have served as modern in their creative period. We must cultivate this soil further, but we must by no means stop there.

For the operetta created by the triumvirate above mentioned there was taken as gauge the artistic enjoyment, the sparkling inventiveness as evidenced in the waltz and other dances.

"Johann Strauss," thus wrote a critic twenty years ago, "who worked untiringly also in the development of the dance waltz, in later works repeatedly aimed at the more refined genre of comic opera, and sometims surprised us not only by his aim, but also by his astonishing ability." He earned no gratitude for this. The public and even a part of the sensible critics were wroth thereat, considered it a transgression of artistic competency and vehemently demanded unadulterated Strauss, i. e., waltz, polka and mazurka. This is the opinion, or better said, perhaps, the statement of a competent person twenty years ago.

Others Have Benefited.

And yet we may say that the reforms worked by Johann Strauss, though at his time they may not have been appreciated, nay, were actually adversely criticised, have gained significance for succeeding composers.

The failure to appreciate these reforms was simply disregarded; they were adopted at a later time, and lo! what Strauss had been blamed for was accepted so much as a matter of course that it even escaped notice.

It is thus in every branch of art. What appeared new and strange yesterday is a matter of course today and tomorrow perhaps out of date. The true artist therefore must ever move on in spite of the knocks dealt him right and left. For if he have something really new to say, it will most certainly make its way.

Proceeding from this point of view there is, of course, a modern operetta, which adheres to the old, in so far as it is good and necessary, but ever at pains to accept, adopt, assimilate new elements. By this we naturally arrive at a refinement, I would almost say, intensifying, of the original part, and thus it comes that, regarding the instrumentation of an operetta, what was yesterday but an attempt is today actual demand.

In this we have an instance of the reform of the modern operetta. Today more refined orchestral tonal effects are heard than formerly in grand opera. No one today will rest content with faint orchestral coloring. At the danger even of being considered vain, I must point out the incontrovertible fact that the "Merry Widow" brought a new feature into this genre.

In Berlin there arose a new species which might be called the burlesque operetta. It contains catchy numbers easily retained as to text,

Tetrazzini Refuses to Sing for Nothing

Prima Donna Says She'd Say "No," Even to President of France.

LONDON, June 13—Mme. Luisa Tetrazzini, who has been staying in London for a few days, was in a rather ruffled temper when the AMERICAN correspondent met her in the Savoy Hotel. The cause, Tetrazzini most apologetically explained, was that since her arrival here she has been "pestered" by the unwelcome attentions of a French charity organizer, who is seeking her gratuitous services for a concert.

"Fancy him asking me to sing for nothing," said the prima donna indignantly. "These Frenchmen have some cheek. Why should I sing without being paid?

"The moment an artist succeeds in Europe she is hounded to death to sing for somebody or other's benefit or concert. How different it is in America. I don't believe in all the time I have spent there I have ever sung or ever been asked to sing at a concert for nothing.

LONDON, June 13—London cannot yet stomach her night clubs. The police continue to prowl around looking for something wicked. Today H. D. FATHER VAUGHAN TO REVISIT U. S. NEXT AUTUMN

Special Cable to Boston American.

LONDON, June 13—Father Bernard Vaughan, brother of the late Cardinal Vaughan, told the Boston AMERICAN correspondent today he had received a warm invitation from American Catholics to revisit the United States at an early date.

"This I'm hoping [illegible] and have already [illegible] from New York [illegible] and Boston, besides [illegible] less important cities.

"My American friends have been exceedingly kind to me and I deeply appreciate their wishes for a return visit from me."

Asked to express himself concerning the militancy of the English suffragettes, Father Vaughan said:

"I can't help comparing the refined, sensible attitude displayed by the American suffragettes to the mad, unscrupulous and insane tactics of the English women.

"I truly wish the militants here would take a lesson from their sisters across the Atlantic. In the United States the women won the vote, but they didn't win it by rushing at the throats of the community or by shouting 'money or your life or both.'

"Women are only irresistible when they are womanly in the best and finest sense of that noble word. You will find nobility and womanhood in the United States unequaled anywhere in the world."

BERLIN, June 13. Official con[illegible] was stamped upon the re[illegible] morganatic marriage be[illegible] Oskar, fifth son of [illegible]peror William, and the Countess Ina Marie von Bassewitz-Levezow, formerly a maid of honor to the Empress and heiress to one of the richest estates of Mecklenburg-Schwerin.

"Their majesties recognize the fact that their son's happiness is more important than the maintenance of the strict family tradition."

The "strict family" tradition in regard to morganatic marriages is not quite as strict as it would appear, for a morganatic marriage of similar importance in the house of Hohenzollern occurred in 1835, when Prince Albrecht of Prussia, Prince Oskar's granduncle, contracted a morganatic [illegible] In fact, the famous Viennese dancer, Therese Elsler.

The bride of Prince Oskar will be unable to take the title of Princess, nor will her children, should she have any, be eligible to any of the royal estates that may fall to her husband. None of these children, of course, could succeed to the throne of Germany in the event of Prince Oskar's succession.

It was understood in court circles today, however, that the Kaiser contemplates raising the rank of the Countess but this will undoubtedly not be until some time after she again makes her appearance at court.

Automaton Plays Faultless Chess

Spanish Engineer Has Invention That Wins Every Game.

PARIS, June 13—One of the most complicated pieces of mechanism ever devised by the ingenuity of man is that which plays a correct game of chess—and wins every time.

The apparatus is the work of Senor L. Torres Quevedo, a well known Spanish civil engineer, who first became famous as the inventor of a machine which solved algebraical equations.

Demonstrations of his chess-playing contrivances, the intricacies of which consist of a [illegible] of wires, [illegible] bulbs, are being given in the Sorbonne.

Dr. Liebknecht even gave a price list of titles, ranging from $2,000 to $5,000 for the [illegible] Order of the Fourth Class, to from $75,000 to $100,000 for elevation to the Prussian nobility with the prefix "von."

ANGLO-AMERICAN "PEACE" BALL WAS A DULL AFFAIR

Hundreds at Albert Hall Bored by Unrehearsed Processions—Mrs John Astor as "Columbia."

By COUNTESS OF WARWICK.

Special Cable to Boston American.

LONDON, June 13.—Doubtless American women will feel gratified to think that in what has been so far the most remarkable week in a rather tepid season, the Anglo-American "Peace" ball, at Albert Hall, Wednesday night, should stand out as the [illegible]. That it has done so is undeniable and if I were to follow the order of the day I should sit down and write in glowing terms about it.

But I follow no orders, whether of day or season and it seems to me that at the moment when most of those [illegible] about the function show [illegible] lost their heads and [illegible] feverish [illegible] So I [illegible] without [illegible] of contradiction [illegible] whose judgment is worth hearing that the Albert Hall function was anything but dazzling.

It was crowded, it was expensive, it brought many costly costumes into the vast arena and hundreds of people enjoyed themselves while as many [illegible] were bored. All this is as it should be, but you cannot make a successful ball out of a series of, in many cases, unrehearsed processions.

Society, whether in England or America, is very greatly concerned with the theatrical side of life and likes nothing better than to invade the stage. It revels in amateur theatricals, but very few of the men and women who take part in them will go so far as to give their work the amount of study it calls for. They [illegible] to wear a [illegible] me is enough and if the wearer has a rather pretty face and correct figure she asks for nothing more.

But this does not suffice. Acting is a serious art and stage deportment is born of years of study and practice. The actress could better assume the role of grand dame in a Mayfair or Fifth avenue drawing room than the Mayfair or Fifth avenue hostess can assume the role of Hibernia, Germania, Austria or Hispania.

I purposely refrain from mentioning Columbia, for of the few real successes in Wednesday night's display, Mrs. John Astor stood out, an eminently dignified living replica of the statue of Liberty.

I leave it at that, for I do not wish to [illegible] and yet [illegible]

I [illegible] rather subtle questions relating to the methods by which these balls [illegible] suffice it to say that they [illegible] together of the kind that supplies matter for congratulation. I prefer to insist that a gathering of this kind does not do so [illegible] was before Albert Hall opened its doors.

Our aristocracy in England has lost much of its prestige and the way to preserve what is left is to do in public only those thing for which it is specially adapted, and to leave severely alone all public exhibitions of a kind that show it to disadvantage.

Processions borrowed from the stage and made up with reference to the claims of personal friends, rather than those of spectacular effectivenes cannot properly recommend themselves to those who wish look beyond the moment. There are some things English women can do.

A week or two ago I made reference to the extraordinary activity of the Duchess of Marlborough, both in her charity and social work. Here is a typical evening's work for her, for real hard work it is.

On Wednesday evening she dined out with friends, after which she attended a concert given in Prince's Galleries in aid of an Austro-Hungarian charity. After spending an hour there, the Duchess hurried on to Drury Lane for the performance of "Boris Godounov" by the Russian Opera company, and finally got to Albert Hall for the Anglo-American Peace Ball, in which she took part in the American procession, representing the State of Oregon. Surely a wonderful evening's work, even for the indefatigable Duchess.

I hear the Horse Show at Olympia has not been anything like the great success of other years, especially from the point of attendance.

As a social function it is not to be compared with the New York Horse Show, owing to there being no promenade. At Olympia, once you have taken your seat you are a fixture for the session, and this does not give any opportunity for the general public to admire at close range the fashionable women celebrities, which, after all, is what many of those of both classes go to this kind of an affair for; namely, to admire or to be admired.

Dudley House, Park Lane, for many years the town house of the Earl of Dudley and now occupied by Hon. John Ward, who married Miss Jean Reid of New York, was opened to the public two days this week, Mrs. Ward having lent it for the purpose of a charitable bazaar. Princess Christian presided both days. That the affair was an emphatic success was due not a little to the activities of American women, notably Mrs. Ward herself.

One of the very few women invited to the State ball at Buckingham [illegible] was Mrs. David Beatty, nee Field, wife of Admiral Beatty. She looked really charming [illegible] over tulle, with [illegible] very soft Liberty [illegible] beneath which is [illegible] pink ribbon draped [illegible] The [illegible] in points, was [illegible] with [illegible] bows. The sleeves also were made of transparent lace.

Mrs. Jack Leslie, nee Jerome, of New York and a sister of Lady Randolph Churchill, is one of those who are missing the London season this year, preferring to remain in her Irish home, where, with her husband, Colonel Leslie, she is entertaining a large house party including Henry [illegible], formerly American ambassador to Spain.

Perhaps the fact that Colonel Leslie commands the County Monaghan battalion of the Ulster volunteer forces has something to do with their remaining in Ireland.

George V. Offers 3 Yacht Racing Prizes

Monarch, in Addition, Gives "King's Cup" for Cowes Regatta

LONDON, June 13—King George is showing in many ways his great increased liking for yacht races and has already offered three prizes this year for competitions in this sport.

Appropriately enough, these have been distributed between England, Scotland and Ireland, the clubs thus favored being the Royal Clyde, Royal Mersey and the Royal St. George's of Dublin, and in addition there will be the usual race for the King's cup at Cowes.

His majesty's famous old cutter Britannia is also being put into commission once more and will take part in the chief regattas around the coast during the next few months, and when at Cowes and Ryde, the King and Prince of Wales will be on board.

LONDON, June 13—It is expected the betrothal of popular Princess Patricia and the Grand Duke of Mecklenburg Strelitz will be announced soon. LEHAR SEES FUTURE FOR THE OPERETTA often in no connection with the plot. It is the chief endeavor of the librettists to continually stimulate the risibles of the public and the aim of the composer that the public, after a first hearing of the so-called hits, will be able to repeat the melody with the aid of singers distributed in the auditorium.

This species has absolutely proven its right to exist. For the public gets the worth of its money in amusement and its purpose is completely fulfilled. There is sufficient public for both kinds, but the work in itself, each of its kind, is good and interesting.

My opinion is that the genuine modern operetta must never neglect the melodic line, but that it must be ennobled by interesting new harmonization. Work after work should have, if possible, a new coloring, but must never lose its peculiar characteristic mark, the "brand," so to speak.

This is the task of a composer of modern operettas. If he has inventive powers, artistic culture if acquired by him will aid him and inspire with warm life the reforms aimed at. Without inventive powers all pains are in vain, and even the greatest musical training of no avail. But it is by no means true that the task of the operetta consists in parodying the great forms of opera. For if this were true Johann Strauss would never have been operetta composer and his "Fledermaus" could never have been entitled to the name "Queen of the Operetta."

The operetta is a form by itself, but it must contain the proper elements. The principal consideration is that book and music are born of the same spirit.

There are operettas which involuntarily have a parodistic effect, and there are various operettas by no means parodistic, which, despite their almost pathetic undertone, are fully understood by the public.

Yet an operetta composer be serious, if he will; his success depends [illegible] and entirely upon whether he succeeds in admirably shaping what moves him and yet expressing it in a manner easily understood. To enrich these means of expression, to refine and increase them to hitherto undreamt-of effectiveness—that is the task of the modern operetta.

ROYAL BANQUET ON BIRTHDAY OF THE POPE

Special Cable to Boston American.

ROME, June 13—The Vatican has been the centre of unusual activity and bustle this week, not only of a religious, but of a social nature as well.

Apart from the consistory, which afforded the visitors a spectacle of gorgeousness and solemnity, the Pope's birthday furnished Cardinal Merry del Val with an occasion for a state banquet, a ritual of the splendid social functions which will long be remembered by those present.

At the same time, the banquet gave new proof of the striking difference in the tastes of Pope Pius and his Secretary of State and portrayed the wonderful change the Vatican court has undergone during the last few years.

The setting selected by Cardinal del Val for the banquet was the Borgian chamber, on the ceiling and walls of whose six stately halls hosts of artists have left undying traces of their genius.

RECEPTION IS PICTURESQUE.

The function began at 8 in the evening, when the forty-nine cardinals, accompanied by the whole Vatican diplomatic corps and high officials of the papal court, attired in picturesque uniforms and vestments, assembled in the first hall.

They were received by Cardinal del Val standing between armors worn by Charles the Bourbon and Pope Julius II, surrounded by tall monsignors. Cardinal del Val, who is descended from many generations of Spanish diplomats and grandees and is instinctively a lover of pomp and magnificence, led the guests through the apartments, whose floors were covered with Oriental carpets and on whose walls, wherever the absence of frescoes permitted, priceless [illegible] hung.

Dinner was served in the sixth hall, where the scene was most dazzling. The absence of women and [illegible] feminine lent a quaint air to the scene, which [illegible] other European court, but [illegible] and on this [illegible] must have left with [illegible]. The menu was [illegible] cook, who was lent to Cardinal del Val as a special favor.

POPE AT SIMPLE REPAST.

While this scene of magnificence and splendor was going on in the Borgian apartment, at the other end of the apostolic palace the Pope was celebrating his birthday in the quiet and simple manner which he prizes far above pomp and splendor of court ceremonials.

An official report of the Pope's day said his Holiness dined with his two sisters and niece and Gilda, a nephew.

Mgr. Parolin declined to give the menu for the Pope's birthday dinner, but said it was too easy to guess that while his guests might have partaken of some simple Venetian dishes the Pontiff had his usual two bottle [illegible] and a glass of milk, prescribed for him by his doctors.

Pope Pius Writes Chant in 4 Parts

Work Is Said to Reveal High Musical Talent.

LONDON, June 13—A Roman Catholic priest recently returned from the consistory at Rome, says that Pope Pius X. has lately enriched the church music with a chant in four parts, written entirely by himself. The composition is characterized by deep religious fervor, and is in the form of an appeal to his patron saint, Joseph.

The chant was sung for the first time recently in the Pope's private chapel in the Vatican. Among the few privileged listeners was Maestro Perosi, conductor of the Sistine choir, who says that the Pope's chant requires a little technical polishing, but reveals high musical talent.

Moving Pictures in Police School

PARIS, June 13—M. Hennion, prefect of police, has just inaugurated a new police school. The feature is the use made of the moving picture machine. Various requirements of police duty are shown to recruits by an ingenious and even amusing series of pictures.

The pictures teach jiu jitsu and the methods of tackling an armed Apache and a burglar, and finally gives what one may call the history of a crime. A house has been burgled, the police are called in, and the pictures explain what the young policeman must do.

Royal Decree Saves Alpine Flowers

VIENNA, June 13—A government order prohibiting the sale of Alpine flora has just been issued in the Tyrol, and the Austrian railway authorities have come to a similar decision forbidding the selling of Alpine flowers in all the railway stations of the empire.

It is a great victory of the Austrian Alpine Club, which has worked several years to obtain this result. Even up to last Summer a big bunch of Alpine flowers could be obtained in the Tyrol from little boys and girls for a few pence, and this small merchandise did great harm to the flora of the country.

Newport to Greet Consuelo Vanderbilt To Open Wonderful New Tea House

When Duchess of Marlborough Arrives in America Festivities Will Begin.

NEWPORT, June 13.—Mrs. O. H. P. Belmont is planning a wonderful series of festivities for the entertainment of her daughter, the Duchess of Marlborough (Consuelo Vanderbilt), who is to arrive here the latter part of this month on her first visit home in seven years.

Marble House, Mrs. Belmont's sumptuous palace, will be the scene of many dinners and receptions.

There will be a mighty suffrage conference on July 8, at which American suffrage leaders will meet the Duchess.

The new $80,000 Chinese tea house on the Cliffs, back of Marble House, will be opened.

In July a gorgeous Chinese ball will be given in the tea house.

Ducks and goldfish will be imported from China to swim on and in the miniature river which is being trained to flow by the tea house.

Mrs. Belmont will invite her rich and influential friends on the upper strata of aristocratic society to greet her distinguished daughter.

The Duchess will sail on June 20 on the Aquitania, the Cunard line's newest floating hotel, the largest steamer ever launched in Great Britain.

The Duchess has already written her mother that she is delighted at the prospect of seeing Newport again. She wishes to meet women who are leaders in the great reform movements in this country, especially those reforms bearing upon the needs of women and children.

Her Grace is a reformer of advanced ideas, but she believes only in constitutional methods, not in militant ones. She is one of the leading members of the Conservative Women's Suffrage Union of England. Practically all the English titled women who are reformers or suffragists belong to this body.

The Duchess is also in the Equal Franchise League and the International Women's Alliance. Last year she was at the alliance convention in Budapest, which Mrs. Belmont also attended.

Society people here and in New York are already speculating anxiously upon getting invitations to the dinners and receptions which Mrs. Belmont is to give in the Duchess' honor, outside of the suffrage conference.

Dinner cards bearing the magic phrase "To meet the Duchess of Marlborough," will be treasured among the elect.

From the purely suffrage standpoint, the events of July 8 appeal the most. The Political Equality Association will hold at Marble House a conference of famous women. Mrs. Belmont is president of the association and, of course, will speak.

The Duchess will deliver an address. What the American girl of English title will have to say will receive widespread attention.

Others who are to speak include Mrs. Maude Ballington Booth of the Volunteers of America, Mrs. Florence Kelley, an officer of the National Child Labor Commission, Miss Rose Schneiderman of the National Woman's Trades Union League; Miss Kate M. Gordon, president of the Southern States Woman Suffrage Conference and known as the "[illegible] of the South;" Katherine Bement Davis, New York Commissioner of Corrections; Miss Mary M. Bartelme, assistant judge of Chicago Juvenile Court, Mrs. Ella Flagg Young, Chicago superintendent of public instruction; State Senator Helen Ring Robinson of Colorado, and Miss Julia C. Lathrop, chief of the Federal Children's Bureau.

The public will be admitted—at so much per head—to the conference. One of the stellar attractions for the public will be the new teahouse, of which so much has been heard. The public will be allowed to go from Marble House to the tea house.

This tea house is reported to be the most wonderful example of Chinese architecture outside of China. Even in China, the architects say, it would be regarded with admiration and respect.

There is a natural impression that a tea house, Chinese or otherwise, is a place where one takes tea [illegible] out of luncheon. This does not apply to Mrs. Belmont's tea house. It is purely for ornamental purposes. [illegible] who figure on eating [illegible] in the $80,000 structure might as well abandon that hope.

The friezes and panels on the tea house are being executed by noted artists. The interior will be adorned with Chinese rugs and curios, of which Mrs. Belmont has assembled a rare collection.

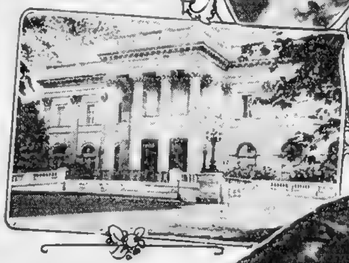
A Chinese gardener is now busy laying out the grounds after the prevailing fashion in the Flowery Kingdom. The river is spanned by a Chinese bridge and the Chinese ducks and goldfish complete the Oriental effect.

There are Chinese proverbs painted on the walls. What do they mean? Mrs. Belmont confesses herself that she does not know. The Chinese is all Greek to her, so to speak. With pardoning curiosity Mrs. Belmont has sent copies of the proverbs to China for translation.

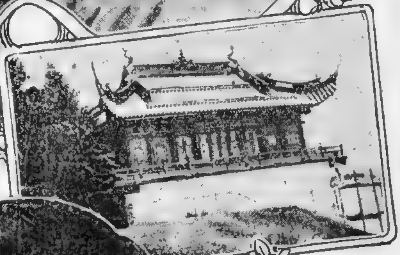
Some time in July Mrs. Belmont will give a grand ball in the tea house in honor of the Duchess. The ball will be Chinese, with costumes to match. This is scheduled to be one of the most festive of all the hospitalities while the Duchess is here.

Those who receive invitations to the ball may assure themselves that, from Mrs. Belmont's standpoint, their social position is all that could be desired.

THE DUCHESS OF MARLBOROUGH.



The Marble House, where the Duchess will be entertained.



The Chinese teahouse—there are few more attractive in China—which will be opened during the visit of the Duchess.

JACKSON COLLEGE GIVES DIPLOMAS TO FIRST REAL CLASS

Seventeen Girls of Institution, Now Entirely Independent of Tufts, to Get Certificates.

SHINE IN ATHLETICS, TOO

The class that graduates from Jackson College this month will be the first real Jackson class to receive degrees from that institution. Since Tufts and Jackson were separated a few years ago the girl graduates of Jackson had their choice of receiving Tufts or Jackson diplomas and all chose Tufts. This year they have no choice, as Jackson is now entirely independent of Tufts.

There are seventeen graduates, all leading figures in the activities of the college. Of the twelve letters awarded by the Jackson Athletic Association and worn by the undergraduates, seven are members of the senior class. In basketball they have taken the lead, having won the college interclass championship two years in succession.

Miss Margaret Buck of Lexington is president of the class and is one of the leading scholars of the college. She will represent the college on the Commencement platform. Last Fall she was awarded a Phi Beta Kappa degree and is a member of the Chi Omega sorority.

Miss Mary Dailey of Lexington, vice president of the class, is one of the leading athletes in the college. Last Winter in the indoor track meet she came within two inches of the world's record for the high jump. She holds the college record for vaulting. She is a member of the Sigma Kappa sorority.

Miss Edith E. Cochran of Bath, Me., is also a leading athlete of the college, having received her letter in track and for playing on the champion basketball team. She is a member of the [illegible] sorority. Miss Helen L. Hearsey of Greensondale, class secretary, was awarded the Chi Omega scholarship last Fall for excellence in economics and sociology. She is a member of the Chi Omega sorority. Miss Jannette I. Schofield of Forest Hills is the class treasurer. She is a member of the Sigma Kappa sorority.

The other members of the class who will receive degrees are: Miss Isabella Cameron of Arlington, Miss Gladys Cobb of Mansfield, Miss Gertrude W[illegible] of [illegible], Miss Emily [illegible] of Little Falls, N. Y., Miss A. Leslie Hooper of West Somerville, Miss [illegible] Helen of Cliftondale, Miss [illegible] of Roxbury, Miss Annette H. M. Commerce Board Cuts Up at Santaug Inn

Scorekeeper in Baseball Goes to Sleep With Score 57 to 57.

The Boston Chamber of Commerce Flour Club members, numbering about 150, rode to Santaug Inn in twenty-five automobiles yesterday to see Mat Benzaquin's Cut Straights and Bill Campbell's Short Patents play baseball. With the score 57 to 57 in the seventh inning Al Merrigold, who was keeping score, went to sleep so nobody will ever know who won.

Walter E. Smith, who framed-up the Fitzgerald-Curley stunt at the Spring Games, was there. He was given a free hand in arranging the funny stunts and everybody is wondering how they all got back to Boston alive.

After a chicken and lobster dinner there was tangoing, no holds barred.

Sanitary Rules for Fish Sales

William K. Beardsley, manager of the New England Fish Exchange, announced yesterday that the exchange would permit the sale of certain fish at retail by Italian dory fishermen on the new South Boston fish pier. Such sales will have to be conducted under strict sanitary regulations, however, and the fishermen will be obliged to conform to the rules of the exchange as to their marketing methods.

HASHIMURA TOGO TELLS OF 'SPLASH' AT WELLESLEY

Fair College Girl Says City Life Star Will Go Again, to His "Astonish."

WRITES DEAR COUSIN NOGO

Hashimura Togo, whose articles are a feature of the City Life section of the Sunday AMERICAN, has been visiting at Wellesley College, according to a half-column letter in the current issue of the Wellesley College News.

One of the college maids who signs herself "M. D., 1916," has written in imitation of Hashimura's amusing style, as follows:

"My dear Cousin Nogo—You remember I told you of my first visit to Wellesley, when, as the Americans would quotation, I made a big splash. Well, cousin Nogo, I have been invited again, and to my great astonish, I accept. I go well armored this time because I had been to Wellesley before. Little Samaki howl when she see me fall off train on top of numerously umbrellas and rainy coats.

"But it is sunshiny this afternoon, she explain. Oh, so indeed, I declaim. She tear implements of rain from me. She disappear. I grow lonesomely until she return. 'Sh-h!' she sibilate. 'I have hid them.' Such not safe in Wellesley. She pull me into auto machine which throb like my heart. The engineer shoot off when only my arms are in. I rejoin them with difficulty. 'Why so lightningly?' I inquisitate.

THAT "NEXT TRAIN."

"'He wants to go back and meet next train,' she explain. 'Oh, is next train especially handsomely?' I inquiry. I forget to discover this because I see enginers cutting through mobs of girls. 'Such dangerousness,' I gasp. 'But not for us,' she congratulate, as she see dearest friends thinly escaping. The machine buck at Romise Coliseum on hill. We fall out. I see Samaki bribing engineer to go away.

"He go with rush. She lead me to bathhouse for boats. Long thin spidery one crawl out. My lower jaw drop with great thud. 'Galley slaves? In Wellesley?' I astonish. In that slave driver with bow strapping to protection chin." Yes, only we call her something else, assure Samaki. Soon little boat with chug-chug dart outwardly and pursue galley. My heart jump like at Port Arthur. 'Is that pirate, and is that infernal machine?' 'That's what I hear her call it yesterday,' interrupt Samaki. 'But what dreadfulness if he catch them?' he ejaculation. 'But he never does,' says Samaki soothing. I am relief.

AT THE SUMMIT.

"We mountain climb and I try to backslide on arriving at summit to see great number girls, eccentrically clothing, tearing here and thereby. Someone inside highly wide walls, (the most dangerous patience, I conclusion) and are beating air. 'Do they sleep in little house here?' I inquiry, seeing small but solidly house. 'Oh, no,' explain Samaki. 'They are chasing ball for exercise.' 'But couldn't they get just as goodly exercise without ball?' I philosophise.

"I hide behind Samaki when I see wild horde of girls running with wooden sabres. 'Are they chasing us?' I quivery and quake. 'No, only a ball,' she explain. 'Uncomfortably climate for balls,' I pity. 'What is that girl?' I point to girl fighting hostilely regiment. 'She's halfback,' Samaki information. 'And the girl reinforcing from rear?' I ask. 'Fullback,' she explanation. 'And girl leaning against the post?' I continuate. 'She's drawback,' say Samaki bitternessly.

'I urge her that I go meet train. I am uncomfortably in athletic grounds. She pilot me through enemy's lines and I am quivery with relief. I am a nervous wreck.

Hoping you are the same,

"HASHIMURA TOGO."

YEAR OF INQUIRY BEFORE STREET RAILWAY FARES ARE BOOSTED; 'MEL' ADAMS ON ZONES

President of the Narrow Gauge Tells How He Would Feel Towards the Merger Plan if He Lived in Malden

The proposed merger of street and interurban railways in Greater Boston has been knocked over the ropes by public protest, the public press and "Mel" Adams

There is likely to be no merger legislation this year beyond an order requiring the Public Service Commission to go into the subject fro A to Z and report to the next Legislature.

The impromptu speech made by Melvin Ohio Adams before the Committee on Street Railways and the Committee on Metropolitan Affairs on Wednesday, has been the talk of the metropolitan district ever since. Snatches of it appeared in the evening newspapers. The Sunday AMERICAN today presents it substantially in full.

President Adams' railroad is the Boston, Revere Beach & Lynn. The public calls it the "Narrow Gauge." Mr. Adams calls it the "Yard Wide." There was a roar of laughter in the committee room when, referring to street car straps, he said General Bancroft describes them as "improvements."

Mr. Adams, who began the practice of law in Boston the year of the Centennial Exposition, is one of the best public speakers in New England. Young men in the Legislature, hearing him on Wednesday for the first time, declared that the proposed "railroad penalty" law should carry a new clause providing for the proper punishment of railroad presidents who can talk like Melvin O. Adams but who selfishly withdrew from public life

"MEL" ADAMS' SPEECH.

Here is how the President of the "Yard Wide" sizes up the State street merger plan, the Legislature of 1914, Winthrop, railroad empires, railroad emperors, the zone system of street railway fares, and a few other little things

I suppose, Mr. Chairman, that it is already clear to the members of this committee that the Boston, Revere Beach & Lynn Railroad has never been called in conference; that it has never known the form of the bill as presented here today

There is an apparent concert of action by the street railways represented in part by Colonel Jackson, and in conference by Colonel Jackson and Mr. Snow, to tell the Boston, Revere Beach & Lynn Railroad what it can do, without any conference with it beforehand as to the merits of the project.

The Boston, Revere Beach & Lynn Railroad is a steam railroad. I have happened to be connected with it for twenty-four years. For twenty-three years I have been elected its president without a dissenting vote.

In those twenty-four years I have seen railroad presidents come and go. I have seen railroads consolidated. I look upon the children's playground of the State House today, where in one committee room railroads are being untied, and in this room there is a proposition of tying up street railways and one unconsulted, solvent, small steam railroad that has had no dream of empire, but has been content to remain an integer and not a vulgar fraction in the dreams of empire which have gone on here in the last twenty-four years.

FIRST IDEA SERVICE.

The Boston, Revere Beach & Lynn Railroad to be sure, is a short line, but it is a wholly State corporation. Its first idea has been "service." Service! And almost the unanimous voice of its patrons has praised, and does praise, that service

It has gone upon the theory that first there should be a safe, well-nourished property, not overborne with fanciful overhead charges. Second, that the men who work for it should be well paid and happy. Third, that the patrons on this road should, by comparison with any other steam or street railway service, say to one another as they go over the road "There is nothing so good as this in Greater Boston" That is what they say today. And lastly, the railroad by economy and by simplicity of management derived from old-fashioned ways has paid its stockholders a reasonable rate upon the money honestly invested, namely, 6 per cent.

Now, the logic of the present bill, so far as it concerns the Boston, Revere Beach & Lynn Railroad, is peculiar The street railways that have franchises in the streets that are a liability and not an asset, that are electrified, say, "We are having a hard time. You are not yet electrified, but you should come in and do as we are doing" That is the logic of it

It is not a promise. It is a performance that I call your attention to. Nowhere are people carried so cheaply Nowhere are they carried so frequently Nowhere are they carried so safely as by the Boston, Revere Beach & Lynn Railroad. And it is the only railroad—I am not boasting—it is the only railroad in Massachusetts, it is the only railroad if you put it under the wider classification, that can look its patrons in their face and its stockholders, too, and its employes and say, "You are all getting that fair share which a public service corporation is designed to furnish under what may be called reasonably ideal conditions"

JOINT ENTERPRISE.

You can see that the personal factor may get a little the better of me if I discuss it here. And yet I found as I sat here that some of my own employes had come in here to listen, because as a matter of fact we run the railroad as a joint enterprise. The young men who work on the railroad say, "This is our railroad." And they are taught to believe so. The people who ride on trains, who take their friends out to that community say, "What do you think of our seacoast?" I be[illegible] have that is ideal, and I have got to look out and see where I am going to land.

You have got to take into account this other phase of it. The Boston, Revere Beach & Lynn Railroad was built thirty-five or forty years ago, and its location today—I hope I am not keeping you too long—its location, I was about to say, Mr. Chairman, is worth today more than its entire capitalization. No railroad can be relocated in the communities where we are, and get its right of way for an amount which represents our entire capitalization, $2,000,000

Now $2,000,000 is all that capital gets any return upon. You take us and put our terminal and our right of way over our own location, into the Commonwealth Electric Railway Company at a price which I understand this bill says shall be at par, and any premiums which we have got on stock which we have sold, and you see what you will do.

CREAM AND MILK.

These gentlemen, properly enough, see on Revere Beach a can of cream. And the old man has not taken it in over night. And they say, "I think we will distribute this with the skimmed milk of our street and elevated railway situation here, and pay them the skimmed milk price." That is the way it strikes me, as a man born in country surroundings, and with country similes ready on his tongue. I don't know what our directors will say or do, but just now I think we would rather have pure milk, and if I was going to put this thing into one single statement as I view it from listening to the explanation given by my friend, Mr. Jackson, I should say that the Boston, Revere Beach & Lynn Railroad should be left out of it altogether

The Chairman. Assuming that the independence of your road, Mr. Adams, should remain, do you think that the public might be better served by some such proposed consolidation outside of the Boston, Revere Beach & Lynn Railroad, than it is at the present time?

Mr. Adams. I don't think it is quite fair for me to speak in criticism of my neighbors who are engaged in the transportation business, but if I was a plain outsider and not tied up to any railroad proposition, and if I lived in Malden or Newton or Hyde Park or Lynn, I should say "What is going to be established under this bill? A zone system?"

Are people who now ride for five cents from some places going to be made by decree of the Public Service Commission to pay six cents? And are people still nearer going to be permitted to pay four cents? And are people to settle nearer Boston because fares are cheaper? And are communities eight or nine miles away which want to be built up going to be discriminated against because street railway companies cannot carry so many people for five cents and that they must charge seven or eight or nine cents? I should think of those things first.

STATE A PARTNER.

The Chairman. Would you take the attitude that people eight miles from Boston should not pay any more than people four or six miles?

Mr. Adams. That is an electric railroad proposition which I do not understand, but I tell you this, Mr. Chairman, that the Boston, Revere Beach & Lynn has for a good many years established two units of fare, one a nickel, including ferry transfer, from Boston to the Saugus River, including Revere Beach, and the other the fare to Lynn. There are no commuters' tickets. Everybody gets one or a thousand tickets at the same price, and upon that theory our experience has been that we are on the whole doing better than when we had twenty cents for a single fare to Revere Beach, and commuters' tickets for three months or a month at a lower rate.

Well, I have undertaken to say to the Committee on Railroads that the State is in partnership with the Boston, Revere Beach & Lynn Railroad, and it is; because, in the first place, the State took from us when we were located on the crest of the beach, our location in order to create and make and build the great reservation down there. They took land from us that would be selling today, and is selling, for ten or fifteen times what they paid for it. And they put us back from the beach. They spent $4,000,000 or $5,000,000, and are spending all the time down there.

What for? To make a great, open marine playground for all these people in South Boston, Charlestown, Dorchester and everywhere else, to get for a day or a Sunday to the beach, and when they did that we were getting twenty cents to go to the beach.

Why are we partners? Because we have cut the fare down to a nickel. Therefore we have entered into the spirit of the Commonwealth's provision to furnish open areas and playgrounds for the people who cannot go away.

If you are going to have State ownership, the very first thing that the State should own would be perhaps the Boston, Revere Beach & Lynn Railroad, because it has got so much at stake there.

WINTHROP HAPPY.

You are partners with us in another respect. Winthrop, that has no other transportation, but ours, and therefore I may draw the deduction without fear of contradiction, when we began, had a small population which was augmented on Sundays by some people who were trying to find their way home from Tafts, and others trying to find the fleeting sand-peep over near Spray.

Today Winthrop is a happy, prosperous community, with over 12,000 people whose percentage of growth is bigger in the last decade than any other town in the United States, excepting Revere and one or two boom towns in Oklahoma.

The only transportation there is the Boston, Revere Beach & Lynn Railroad. Why haven't I a right to make that DEDUCTION of the broadest development of a community and the best development of a community by the railroad?

You don't hear people from Winthrop coming to the Public Service Commission complaining about us. You don't hear the people of Winthrop or Revere coming before any of these committees and complaining about us I challenge the Representative from Revere (Representative Casassa)—I don't know what he would say, but I challenge the Representative from Revere to state whether, so far as the territory served by the Boston, Revere Beach & Lynn is concerned, it is not as well served in Revere by the Boston, Revere Beach & Lynn Railroad as one could expect.

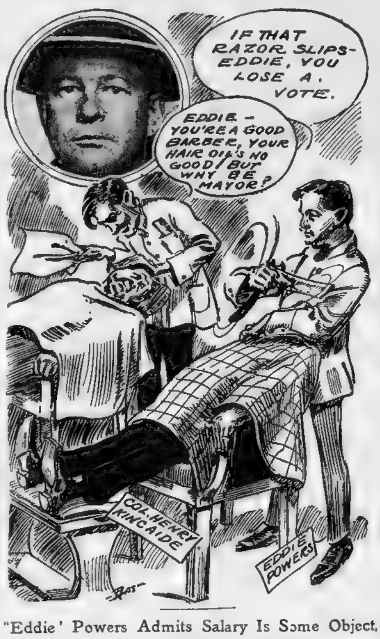
Campaigns as He Shaves

EDWARD P. POWERS



IF THAT RAZOR SLIPS- EDDIE, YOU LOSE A VOTE.
EDDIE - YOU'RE A GOOD BARBER, YOUR HAIR OIL'S NO GOOD! BUT WHY BE MAYOR?
COL. HENRY KINCAIDE
EDDIE POWERS

"Eddie' Powers Admits Salary Is Some Object, But Love of Fellow Man Is First

Trade was slack in the barber shop of Edward P. Powers, Independent candidate for Mayor of Quincy. The Mayor-to-be was sitting by the window, bowing cordially to the passers-by, even when he didn't know them.

"Because, they're all my future constituents, and it's up to me to get acquainted with them," he explained to the Italian assistant who was gazing admiringly at the four-legged chicken in the bottle of alcohol.

Out in the square the trolley cars moved back and forth, and despite the heat all the activity of a suburban metropolis was visible. The blue eyes of Mr. Powers gleamed with pride and his lips parted in a glittering yellow smile, for Mr. Powers possesses two gold front teeth

"It's some town, at that," remarked the future Mayor to the expert assistant, who was just tucking a fat man into the tonsorial chair.

"Eddie," said the fat man kindly "you were a good street car conductor and you're a pretty good barber even if your hair restorer ain't any use, but what I want to know is what right have you got to be Mayor of Quincy. What's in it for you."

"Well," responded the candidate frankly, "there's $2,500 a year in it and I ain't denying that it's an object, but the primary purpose that makes me want to be elected is love of my fellow-man."

SORRY FOR THE KIDS.

The fat man made a sound like a pig that had found a large, fine turnip, and the Italian barber withdrew the razor just in time to avoid amputating one of his numerous chins.

"Straight goods," declared Eddie earnestly. "It's makes my heart bleed, that's what it does, to see what goes on in this town under an inhuman administration."

"What, for instance"?

"We'll take the kids along down to Hough's Neck. In the whole place there isn't a playground any more. They have been chased from field to field until there ain't any more fields.

"Every time they start to play ball in the street the ubiquitous policeman comes along and chases them away. I've always been of the opinion that policemen were created for something else than chasing kids, but that's neither here nor there. I'm arranging a procession of all the kids at the neck to City Hall to demand a playground of Mayor Miller and the Council If they don't give it to 'em, why just vote for Eddie P. Powers, the Independent candidate, that's all."

"Why don't you go after a regular nomination. What do you want to be an independent for?"

"Because I don't believe that the parties ought to mix in municipal elections. I won't have anything to do with party nominations, and I don't make no political pledges. When I'm in I'll make appointments to the best of my judgment. That's me."

Colonel Henry Kincaide, proprietor of Kincaide's Theatre, Kincaide's Department Store, Kincaide's Furniture Emporium and several other Quincy enterprises, now darkened the door

"Ain't this fine, colonel," he began. "If I wanted to see you to discuss the campaign, I'd have to go to your place, and you'd be busy, and I'd be taking up your valuable time. Now we can talk at our leisure."

FEARFUL THREAT.

"Talk all you like, Eddie," said Kincaide, "but if you let that razor slip and make the slightest little gash I promise you that the Independent candidate for mayor will be eliminated, obliterated, erased"

"Those are some words," said Eddie in admiration, "Wait till I write them down, colonel. Can't I persuade you to go on the stump for me? You could swing me a lot of votes."

"I'll go on the stump for you, Eddie," said the fat man, who has been turned loose by the Italian assistant "I'm for Miller myself, and if I could make a few speeches for you it might help him."

"Much obliged I may take you at that," replied Eddie, whose motto is not to get feased by kidding

"Let 'em kid you, that's my motto," he explained to the belathered Kincaide. "When it comes time to vote they say, 'Well, he's a good fellow after all, and they give you a vote."

"Eddie, you're a philosopher," said Colonel Kincaide, who had come through the operation unscathed

"Sure, I am," said Mr. Powers. "Just pass the word along, that's all I ask.

"I got a new idea for a cartoon," he declared to the assistant when the magnate had departed. "I'm going to get Hy to draw me a picture of a boat with three men in it standing up. They'll be the opposition candidates. He'll write City of Quincy on the side of the boat. Then there will be a picture of me standing on the shore looking very stern and saying to the others

"'Sit down! You're rocking the boat.'"

Full of his idea, Eddie covered his hairless dome with his hat and hastened down the street toward the office of his cartoonist. His progress was slow, as he stopped every man he met to shake hands.

"Some campaigner," remarked Eddie, as he finally turned into the building where Hy, the artist, is located.

Wheat Market Is Still Very Bearish

Bulls Predict, However, That the Present Conditions Cannot Last.

By JOSEPH F. PRITCHARD.

CHICAGO, June 13.—The wheat market at Chicago has been attacked and pounded to lower levels by speculators who were never known to handle a bushel of cash wheat, and not by hedges against the new crop but these sales have been well taken care of.

Some of the more conservative men in the trade are advising customers to use caution in making new commitments on the short or bear side, as they believe that the market is largely oversold

As long as conditions continue favorable in the Spring wheat country and as long as the Spring returns are in favor of farmers and the weather continues good the bear side of the market will continue popular and the bulls will find sledding rather rough.

CHICAGO, June 13.—Wheat closed higher, July ⅛c, September ⅛ and December ⅛c. Corn was ⅛ to ⅜c higher. Oats were a shade higher for July, while the deferred months were ⅛ to ⅛c lower. Hog products were unchanged. Prices were:

NEW HAVEN EARNINGS.

As regards New Haven road earnings, it is stated that its May gross decreased approximately $280,000. Eleven months' gross decreased $2,400,000 from last year's record, but exceeds any previous year in company's history. Eleven months' earnings of about $60,800,000 compare with $63,200,000 in 1913. Notwithstanding May's decrease in gross, New Haven saved on conducting transportation and taxes were somewhat smaller. In consequence there was a small gain in net after taxes. For eleven months ending May 31 decrease in net after taxes was about $3,420,000, or about 20 per cent

MONEY MARKET.

There was no change in the money market at the weekend and the most interesting development for the week was the advance in foreign exchange rates. At the close yesterday in New York posted rates were as follows: sterling exchange $4.87 to $4.89½, with actual business in bankers' bills at 4.8890 to 4.8895 for demand and 4.86¼ to 4.8600 for sixty-day bills. More gold will be shipped to Europe this week. A shipment of $7,000,000 in ten and twenty dollar gold pieces was made from the Philadelphia sub-treasury to the one in New York on Friday to provide for emergencies. [illegible] exports of gold last week broke all records [illegible] was partially offset in New York by currency receipts from the interior. Since January [illegible] gold exports have totalled more than $[illegible],000,000 and New York banks have gained from the interior $200,648,000, which compares with a gain of $198,818,000 in the corresponding period of 1913, $160,338,000 in 1912, $196,885,000 in 1911, and $81,7[illegible],000 [illegible] 1910.

ELEVATED DOING BETTER.

A Boston Elevated director says he would not be surprised to see the road go back upon a 6 per cent. basis this year, and that it is a 5 per cent. stock today. He said: 'In my opinion the advance in Boston Elevated is due directly to the bettering prospects for dividends on the $23,000,000 stock and not because of the possibility of a street railway consolidation combining into a unit the greater Boston system."

FAILURES FOR A WEEK.

Failures last week in the United States numbered 294, against 318 for the previous week. 332 in the preceding week, and 259 in the corresponding week last year. In Canada the number was 33, as against 30 for the previous week, 32 for the preceding week and 39 last year.

NO SPECIAL FARM RATES.

Secretary Wilson wanted railroads traversing districts where his department has been asked to furnish 80,000 men to harvest crops, to run excursions, but Western roads have declined to make special rates for farm laborers.

COFFEE IMPORTS.

More than two-thirds of the 852,529,493 pounds of coffee imported in 1913 came from Brazil, and total valuation was $105,000,000. It is estimated that the coffee made at least 2,557,500,000 gallons of drink

HOTEL COMPANY DIVIDENDS.

The Ricker Hotel Company, which owns the "Mt. Kineo" and "Samoset" properties, has declared a dividend of 2 per cent. on its 14,500 shares, all of which are held by Maine Central Railroad

NIPISSING EARNINGS.

Earnings for four months of the Nipissing Mines Company approximated $110,000 net. Dividend requirements at the 20 per cent. annual rate totalled $375,000.

POND CREEK PRODUCTION.

Pond Creek's May production was more than 60,000 tons of coal, and for the first five months this year the total was more than 250,000.

Sir Thomas Lipton Fined for Speeding

LONDON, June 13.—Sir Thomas Lipton was fined $50 by a Southampton magistrate for exceeding the speed limit in his auto. Sir Thomas sent his secretary to court and the latter explained that Sir Thomas was coming from the trial of the Shamrock, and as there is no speed limit for yachts and as the Shamrock had sailed so fast, Lipton afterwards driving the automobile, was "all at sea."

Stocks Irregular, Markets Close Quiet

Stocks were quiet yesterday, but a little stronger on the average at the close than at the opening There were no developments and no features. Americans closed below parity in London and that market was listless. Reports from Paris indicated that uncertainty there has not lessened. The political situation is retarding both speculation and business. One European fear is that Greece and Turkey may resume fighting

Trading in New York for the first hour amounted to less than 25,000 shares, for the morning to only about 37,000 Traders are of the opinion that stagnation would prevail until the Interstate Commerce Commission renders its decision on the Eastern freight rate question There was a rumor around Wall Street that the verdict will be rendered after the close of stock markets on Monday. The impression is general that the decision will be announced soon. Uncertainty prevails. The commission is giving out no hint.

Speculative sentiment is hesitant. There is nothing in the present situation to encourage commitments in either direction. The crop outlook is as good as ever and there is more optimism on the part of steel and iron producers. But it is said that the business improvement is more psychological than actual. Chicago bank failures have had little effect upon markets. Neither has the record-breaking shipments of gold.

The price movements of stocks yesterday was very narrow and at the close about as many issues showed gains as there were others which had sustained losses. Not one on the New York active list went up or down a point. That was true of the one in Boston. The public continued indifferent; if they watched markets at all it was from the remote outside. Coppers did not indicate that there was any labor trouble in the Butte camp.

AMERICAN LABOR BETTER THAN EUROPEAN IN SOME RESPECTS

But if Native Born Artisan or Farmer Works Faster and Produces More, the Foreigner Is Apt to Be the Mots Thorough

By BOERSIANER.

CHICAGO, June 13.—"Relative to your article on immigration, do you think foreign labor as beneficial and as good as American labor?" is an inquiry that comes from a Northern Michigan County.

This is a broad question which cannot be answered sweepingly. There is labor and labor—various kinds of labor. For work, unskilled work, the native-born worker is no doubt superior, although the room for comparison is narrow. In the crafts—in the skilled trades—the American speaking generally is more satisfactory than the European. He does more work and does it quicker. Quantitatively, he is several marks above the foreigner.

But there are certain crafts in which the Europeans excels qualitively. Heredity offers the reason. The first and most efficient sort of apprenticeship is that by birth. The European father as a rule teaches his son—and generally sons—that by which he makes his living almost without knowing it. The son picks up the skill which is in the air of the house almost without feeling that he is doing so.

In Europe skilled labor has for generations on generations intensified and inherited advantage of combination, has formed a bounded and exclusive society, guild, trades union, which has kept more or less successfully what may be called the open secret of doing things well.

The things are not done expeditiously as in America, but they are done thoroughly

FARMING METHODS COMPARED.

As in mechanics, so in farming The American farmer produces more. He is quicker to take up inventions. Machinery that will facilitate his work is readily bought. But he has less regard for mother earth than the European. In Europe there are no abandoned farms, as the term is understood here. Every foot of ground abroad is carefully cultivated. In France, for example, the soil within a few inches of the railway tracks is planted and fostered, and what is more important, the soil is reverently nurtured. It is fertilized skillfully. The American farmer is extensive, the European intensive.

The children of American farmers and artisans oftener than not fail to follow their father's occupation. They turn to something else, something which they deem better, or at least they think will be more remunerative. Frequently when a farmer's offspring do not settle in a country town they go to the large cities. In the trades and in agriculture there is not in America, as in Europe, that descent of occupation from one generation to the next which makes for traditional proficiency, which breeds expertness in the bone To be sure it has its defects—this tradition—for it is slow to yield to improvement and more or less atrophies ambition

POLITICAL ECONOMISTS' STYLE.

A correspondent (presumably a young man) complains of his inability to follow writers on political economy. "Why can't this subject be made plainer? Why is it that financial articles as a rule are written in a way that makes it hard for an average reader to understand them?"

To write incomprehensively is a tradition inherited from the old English school of political economists. These pioneers of the science wrote for the select few, for the people who practice commerce and finance on an extensive scale. The outer world was ignored. Many of the ideas, most of the vocabulary and the entire style (for lack of it) have been adopted by too many of the writers of today. When writing for the mass of men to use words always in the same sense (is the sense understood only by the initiated) is a serious mistake.

Common words are so few, that if tied down to one meaning they are not enough for public purposes; they do their work in common life because they are in a state of incessant slight variation, meaning one thing in one discussion and another a little different in the next. If one were to write an invariable nomenclature in a science where there is so much to be said of many things, as in political economy, one should invent terms, like the writers on other sciences.

A writer must not, of course, use words out of his own head which the average reader never heard of—he will not read him if he does.

BEST WAY TO WRITE.

The best way, as this will not do, is to give up uniform uses to write more as in common life, where the context is a sort of unexpected interpretation clause, showing in what sense words are used; only as in political economy there are more difficult things to speak of than in common conversation a writer must take care, give more warning of any change and at times write out the interpretation clause for that page of discussion lest there should be any mistake. This is difficult and delicate work, and all that is to be said in defence of it is that in practice it is safer than the competing plan of inflexible definition.

Any one who tries to express varied meanings of complex things with a scanty vocabulary of fastened senses will find that his style grows cumbrous without being accurate, that he has to use long periphrases for common thoughts, and that after all he does not come out right.

Cotton Crop Is Far Under Normal

Question of Supply and Demand Favors Higher Prices for Staple.

By EDWARD LOW RANLETT.

NEW YORK, June 13.—Discussion of the cotton market must be linked with general economic conditions. In so far as these conditions be of influence they are against higher prices for the staple. But supply and demand are so distinctly in favor of higher prices that the world must soon face this development.

The crop of 1914-15 is nearly sure to be a failure. This means that the yield per acre will fall far short of the normal, and may prove in the end a disaster of the first magnitude. Of course, the total may exceed many crops of the past, but it must be understood that the acreage devoted to cotton will perhaps equal or exceed the record. All of this means that ultimately prices must rise for the raw material.

THIS YEAR'S GLIDDEN TOUR IS ABANDONED

The Chicago to Boston Run Scheduled for the Latter Part of This Month Failed to Attract a Sufficient Number of Entries to Insure a Successful Contest.

By J. O. KERRISON.

The proposed road race from Chicago to Boston under the guise of an endurance contest for the Glidden and other trophies under the jurisdiction of the American Automobile Association has been abandoned. The decision to forego this particular contest this year was reached during the past week and although the reason for the same has not been officially announced it can be assumed that the interest exhibited by the makers of motor vehicles was not of such magnitude as to guarantee the success of the contest.

The American Automobile Association has in this instance as in one or two others relating to the Glidden trophy been somewhat arbitrary in its plans. This year the idea was to have a non-motor stop run from Chicago to Boston. Just what this would determine in the way of endurance is hard to appreciate. It would mean an endurance test of man as much as machines and the results under these abnormal conditions would, of course, be questionable. Certain it is that they would not, to the thinking man, have any great weight in assisting him to determine what car he should finally purchase.

A non-motor stop run may have some real merit, but to make it over a period of sixty hours and such a distance and over such roads as prevail between Chicago and Boston is asking a motor to do in that period more than what would be expected in the life of the average motor car.

The conditions as planned provide that an average pace of twenty-miles an hour should be maintained. This in itself would have caused a violation of the speed laws in many of the States and particularly so in Massachusetts. To make an average of twenty miles an hour a car must necessarily at some time or other touch the high spots and whatever else can be said an affair as the run planned could not have helped but deteriorate into a road race contest rather than an endurance run.

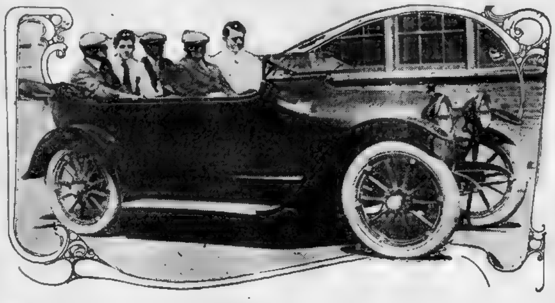
There is ample opportunity to provide a contest for the Glidden and Anderson trophy. It is not necessary to make a race of it. It is not necessary to cause untold hardship for the men engaged therein, and there could be brought about a competition of real value to the industry and to the A. A. A. If one should turn back the pages of history and return to the conditions which governed the contests of 1905 and 1906, there is no doubt in my mind but what a large number of entries could be secured and the tour made a reliability and a pleasure run combined.

The abandonment of this tour will not in any way interfere with the Spring meeting of the American Automobile Association at Bethlehem early in July. The attendance there, according to all indications, will be most gratifying to the officials. There will not, however, be any large run from Boston to Bethlehem, as the participants in the meeting and outing seem to prefer a tour in the go-as-you-please fashion to being participants in the regularly scheduled and organized run. The former makes a pleasure of what becomes a hardship under the latter conditions.

Bethlehem, the first week in July, will be the motorists' Mecca. Tourists will come from all parts of the country to participate in the deliberations of that meeting, as well as to enjoy the pleasures and beauties to be found only in the White Mountains of New Hampshire—the motorists' playground of New England.

AGENTS ENJOY MOTORING PLEASURES

MEN FROM ALL NEW ENGLAND MEET IN BOSTON



Fred Bradford and A. J. Shorey with Velie agents in attendance on "Velie Days" in the latest Velie model.

Lubrication Oil Causes Poor Ignition

Lubricating oil in the combustion chambers causes irregular ignition. One cause which is usually overlooked is too heavy lubricating oil. When the cylinders are oiled by splash the excess oil should run back, or be scraped back by the piston rings, into the crank-case. Experiments have shown that when heavy oil is used this function is not done perfectly.

Manifold Should Be Properly Replaced

Carelessness in replacing the manifolds of the Ford car so that the small gasket collars do not make air-tight joints, is a cause of trouble often overlooked. It is well to fasten these gaskets in the holes in the manifold by using small pieces of paper to wedge them in, and then adjusting the manifold to the holes in the cylinders. This plan obviates dropping them, or getting them in out of true.

PRODUCTIVE OF GOOD RESULTS

Many Sales Made at Velie Convention During the Past Few Days.

Agents from all over New England were decidedly active during the Velie days enjoyed at the wholesale branch of the Velie Motor Vehicle Company, at its headquarters in the Shoe and Leather Building, during the past few days. Manager Fred Bradfield devised a special plan whereby he brought into town the men who are spreading the Velie gospel throughout this territory. His plan was productive of good results, for in the three days of the meeting no less than twenty-eight cars were turned over, and these were all retail sales.

Manager Bradfield offered prizes to the man who was first to sell a car on each day of the convention, one to the dealer who sold the largest number of cars and another to the dealer who produced the largest number of prospects in that period. The competition for these trophies was decidedly keen and particularly gratifying to the organization. During the convention at least fifty dealers were on hand and an excellent opportunity was presented whereby they became closer affiliated with Velie service and organization.

TOLEDO GETS TWO BIG TEAMS

Special Attractions Secured for Famous "Overland Day."

For the first time since the opening of the championship season a team from each of the two major leagues will meet, when the world's champion Philadelphia Athletics try conclusions with their old-time rivals, the Chicago Cubs, at Swayne Field, Toledo, on June 23.

The exhibition game has been arranged by John N. Willys, president of the Willys-Overland Company, to furnish the annual baseball festival for his 7,500 factory employes. It has been the company's custom to close up shop and send all employes to the opening game of the Toledo season. When the American Association team was removed to Cleveland, "Overland Day" at the ball park was automatically postponed.

Both teams will put their regular lineups in the field, according to Managers Connie Mack and Hank O'Day. The selection of umpires has not yet been announced, although it is understood that two prominent major league arbitrators will be chosen to officiate.

Approximately 10,000 employes and their friends will witness the game as guests of the Overland Company.

FOURTH OF JULY MEET.

A general roundup of motorcyclists of the East will be held at Saratoga Springs, N. Y., on July 3, 4 and 5, when riders from half a dozen States will gather for a Fourth of July rally. There will be five tours to the Springs, starting from Baltimore, Washington, Boston, Springfield and Buffalo. And it is expected that several thousand riders will take part, as Saratoga Springs is one of the most attractive beauty spots of the East.

ONE MAN—
9,000 HORSEPOWER
How the Largest Exclusive Tire Factory
Keeps Cost Down and Keeps Quality Up
Firestone
TIRES
COST NO MORE THAN AVERAGE

Every facility for economical production that science has been able to produce has been brought to bear in the Firestone plant to give you Firestone quality at ordinary price. The power plant where one man feeds the boilers that produde 9,000 horsepower is one example of Firestone scientific management.

The great Firestone plant naturally attracts the country's greatest tire experts. Every man in this factory is a tire specialist, doing his work with skill and accuracy. Here nothing but tires is made, and every ounce of steam power, every effort of the workmen, every bit of study and thought are focussed on the making of Firestone Tires. This concentration and specialization in production make it possible to give highest quality at a cost no greater than only average tires.

This highest quality was proved again at the International Sweepstakes in Indianapolis last Decoration Day, when Barney Oldfield led all American cars in the Five-Hundred-Mile Race.

Although he exceeded the speed of last year's winner, averaging 78.15 miles per hour, two of Barney's Firestone Tires went through the entire five hundred miles without change.

Firestone finished first and second in this great race in 1913, as you will remember; also first in 1911. Firestones make good on the road because they are made good at the factory.

$950 Overland
The Strict Maintenance of this Price is Your Guarantee of Security

THIS list price is established and maintained all over the country. It makes no difference whether you purchase your Overland in New York or New Mexico — this price never varies.

Recently, ten friends decided to each get an Overland. They went to an Overland dealer in a body—said they would take ten cars on the spot if he would give them 5% off. He refused. They argued that his neighboring competitor had already offered them 10% off on the car he represented. The Overland dealer then replied that if they would wait a few days longer the man next door would probably give them 20% off! They did wait a few days—then bought ten Overlands at the full list price.

Now—these men bought the Overlands, not because they knew so much more about the car, but because they had complete confidence in the Overland dealer who had the one fixed price and absolutely no confidence in the competing dealer who had a variety of prices.

It does not take any great amount of intelligence to see through the weaknesses, drawbacks and insecurity of a cut-price car proposition. Either the car, or the factory behind it, or the dealer, or all three cannot be relied upon.

Remember—that in purchasing an Overland you get a great deal more than just the best car for the least money; you get service that is dependable, permanent and international.

That the public has firm faith in the Overland is amply evidenced by the following record breaking figures:

Up to date we have delivered over $42,000,000.00 worth of nineteen fourteen Overlands. Right now the public is investing over $250,000.00 a day in Overlands.

If we did not out-class (both in car value and service) those who are continually cutting their price how could we continue to get the greatest volume of business?

The Overland is a larger car; a more powerful car; a more comfortable car; a more complete car and a more thoroughly made car than any other for the price.

And it costs you 30% less than any other similar car.

Why don't you have an Overland demonstration?

SAFETY FIRST CAMPAIGN IS INAUGURATED

The "Safety First" campaign inaugurated by the B[illegible] [illegible] of Commerce is something [illegible] should receive not only the [illegible] but also the hearty [illegible] of every [illegible] its purpose [illegible] to the [illegible] life and [illegible] a campaign [illegible] pleasure to those [illegible] to come.

The bulk of [illegible] are caused through carelessness [illegible] thoughtlessness, two [illegible] efforts can be [illegible] to the advantage of all.

In the hustle and bustle of everyday life one is apt to overlook what are too commonly considered as matters of small importance while as a matter of fact these apparently insignificant [illegible] are of and do assume immense and far-reaching proportions, proportions which cannot be measured [illegible] by persons who have not experienced the heart-rending [illegible] caused by the sudden and accidental taking off of some loved one.

The Chamber's first step in this campaign was taken on Wednesday last when each pupil in the [illegible] of Boston received an open letter [illegible] a letter which should be read and digested by all persons, and [illegible] right [illegible] addressed to mothers and fathers in all cities.

It reads as follows:

To the Mothers and Fathers of Boston:

Today a final appeal is being [illegible] to your children in the public [illegible] to remember "Safety First" [illegible] vacation, so that the street accidents which bring sorrow to so many [illegible] during the Summer, may be lessened this year. This appeal is for you as much as for the children.

The number of avoidable accidents to children each year is appalling. Do you realize that in the last two decades 25,000 children have been killed by trespassing on railroad tracks in this country? That death-roll represents a gravestone for every mile of a road around the globe. Many more thousands of children were injured during the same period.

And [illegible] the last four years [illegible] than [illegible] occurred on the lines of one street railway company? Many of these represented injuries to [illegible] almost all of them were on account of carelessness on the part of the [illegible] injured. These [illegible] they can not be [illegible]

The children of Boston are your responsibility. What are you as parents going to do about it?

Let us suggest some ways where you can help:

1.—Teach your children what the streets are for.

The streets are for travel and traffic [illegible] cars [illegible] trucks and wagons [illegible] are not playgrounds for [illegible]

There are playgrounds and parks where your girls and boys may play in safety. [illegible] in the streets is costly [illegible] lives of children. "Better be safe than sorry."

2.—Teach your children how to use the streets.

To look both ways before crossing [illegible] to cross quickly and without fear.

Not to get frightened at approaching vehicles and try to run back or dodge between them. Fear is often fatal, assurance comes from care.

Your child can feel just as safe crossing the streets as anywhere else if he will only keep looking!

To use when possible the regular street crossings where traffic is properly controlled.

To be careful when crossing behind a car or team to look out for vehicles approaching on the other side from the opposite direction.

3.—Teach your children how to use the street cars.

[illegible] always until the car stops before getting on or off. A [illegible] may save [illegible] a lifetime. "Better be [illegible] than sorry."

To [illegible] face forward and [illegible] both ways before crossing [illegible]

4.—[illegible] to be careful: [illegible] mind the lesson [illegible] teach your children.

[illegible] needs you the [illegible] Be careful!

BOSTON TO REVERE BEACH

Until the Wellington Bridge is repaired, the shortest route from Boston is to go out Washington street through Charlestown, following the elevated structure to Sullivan square, where turn right following trolley into Broadway, which crosses the Revere Beach Reservation.

Another way which some prefer is to go out to Cambridge, turn right on Columbia street (opposite the fire station on left), left on Broadway, right on Prospect street, then left through Union square, turning next right over Walnut street cross Broadway (double trolley) entering the Revere Beach Reservation turn first left to Medford square where turn sharp right on Riverside avenue.

NEW CHANDLER IS ANNOUNCED

R. B. Nettleton Returns to Boston with Sensational News.

R. B. Nettleton of the Chandler Motor Car Company of New England returned to Boston from the Chandler plant at [illegible] yesterday bringing with him the announcement of the new 1915 Chandler Six to sell at $[illegible]

Just a year ago the Chandler company occupied a pioneer position in the popular priced six-cylinder field. At that time dealers and manufacturers claimed that a high-grade six-cylinder car could not be manufactured and marketed at profit under [illegible]

SUCCESSFUL IN FIRST YEAR.

"Our announcement of a lower priced 1915 Chandler Six is in the nature of a profit-sharing plan on which our next season's selling campaign will be built," says C. A. Emise, vice-president and sales manager of the Chandler company. "The wonderful success of the Chandler Six in its first year on the market has paved the way for the step which we have been looking forward to for the past twelve months.

"We are planning to double our production for 1915 and will be in a position to do even better than that should conditions warrant."

TEN PER CENT. MORE POWER.

Notwithstanding the reduction in price of the 1915 car, Chandler engineers have continued their policy of adding refinements to the car wherever possible. Among the important advances in improvement on the 1915 model is the increase of 10 per cent more power in the car's motor.

One of the important features of construction of the Chandler Six is the long stroke motor. The cylinders are cast in two blocks with a bore of [illegible] inches and a 5-inch stroke. All valves are enclosed, tending toward the exceptionally silent running car. The crank shaft and cams are cut from solid forgings. The engineers of the Chandler company having made a study of qualities tending toward lightness have used aluminum wherever possible. The entire [illegible] of this metal and [illegible] thus eliminating the old fashioned unsightly oil-pan used on many cars.

In place of attempting to combine the electric starting, lighting and ignition systems in one complicated instrument the Chandler engineers have installed the electrical apparatus in three separate units—the Bosch magneto for ignition and a separate generator and motor for lighting and starting.

Equipment outside of the very complete motor [illegible] includes practically every [illegible] necessity for the motorist [illegible] adjustable Jiffy curtains, [illegible] cushions, [illegible] windshield [illegible] rain and ventilating [illegible], electric horn, air pressure gauge, eight-day clock, Jones speedometer and an electrically lighted [illegible] all part of the equipment. As during the past year, the Chandler [illegible] have five types of bodies, including the touring car, roadster, coupe, limousine and Sedan.

COST OF UPKEEP IS COMING DOWN

Lightness of New Cars and Lowered Price of Supplies the Cause.

That sales conditions in the automobile field have been widely affected by the recent cuts in the price of gasoline, oil, tires and other supplies is the declaration of Vice-President E. R. Benson of the Studebaker Corporation, who says that many recent Studebaker buyers are persons who have heretofore remained out of the market, due to their former belief that maintenance expense was greater than they could afford.

"I had this increased efficiency brought home to me quite forcibly by a personal friend," said Mr. Benson. "This man owned a heavy, costly car last year. He decided that the cost of maintenance was too high, and changed last Winter to a Studebaker Light 'Six.'

"Of course, the change resulted in a greatly increased mileage for each gallon of fuel. This saving was rendered all the more emphatic by the fact that he is now paying twelve cents per gallon for gasoline, instead of twenty—this due to the general lowering of price which has featured the gasoline business all over the country.

"Though he has not yet bought any new tires, and expects to get much more than the guaranteed mileage out of his present set, he knows that, [illegible] the decrease in prices he can secure tires for his Studebaker Six at [illegible] half the cost of those he [illegible] for his last year's car."

A Saving on Tires

Did you ever consider why your rear tires wear out sooner than our front tires?

Not only because of the fact that they are on the driving wheels but because of the manner in which the power affects them in the ordinary gear-driven car. When the clutch is thrown in the jerk is transmitted straight through to the wheels, scraping the tires on the ground. In the course of time, that little scrape each time you start, breaks down the tires on the rear wheels and they are gone appreciably before the front tires.

This trouble is obviated in the Cartercar because the

does not transmit the jerk when the motor is connected with the driving mechanism. The friction disc slips just a trifle before taking hold firmly. Do not think, however, that this involves any loss of power, for the "slip" comes only with the sudden thrust; nor that the friction band on the drive wheel suffers any undue wear. It is homogeneous and will wear through its entire thickness only after 5,000 to 8,000 miles or more use.

Safe Feature of Modern Car

"The standpoint of safety, probably the first consideration should be the design, character and size of [illegible]," says Chief Engineer George Weidely of the Premier Company. The braking system is one of the features frequently overlooked by prospective purchasers, the chassis [illegible] the general appearance of the care all carefully looked [illegible] but brakes, in many respects the most important feature of a car, are not [illegible]

Brakes may be called the greatest safe feature of the modern automobile.

Clever Device Increases Safety

A new device in the field of big manufacturing has been brought out [illegible] B. F. Goodrich Company at its [illegible] factories at Akron, Ohio.

[illegible] is a pay record card for all [illegible] which also carries a "Safety Bulletin." The pay record card is designed to help the employe keep track of the number of hours he has worked each day, the amount of piecework finished and the daily earnings that result.

In addition, however, the card carries a safety talk, touching on a different topic with each issue, and a new card is "published" each half month.

Six Two-Tons Are Added to Fleet

Those who have had an opportunity of inspecting the new fleet of six two-ton G. V. electric trucks, which are just being placed in commission by the Boston Edison Company, pronounce them the finest specimens of motor truck building which have come to Boston.

These trucks are each equipped with electrically driven winches for the pulling of cables through conduit in the streets, for raising poles or running wires. They can easily pull a ton or more from the ground to the floor of the trucks when used for loading purposes.

Motor Trucks in Furniture Trade

"Probably no one line of business is more adapted to the successful use of motor trucks than the retail furniture trade. With prompt long-distance deliveries required, it would be next to impossible to successfully compete in the furniture business without the assistance of motor trucks," says Normal H. Halliday, manager Mack Motor Truck Company.

Among other recent orders Mr. Halliday particularly mentions a repeat order calling for a two-ton Mack truck received from C. E. Osgood Company, furniture dealers, as going to prove the above statement.

Crockett Goes with Lyons-Knight

Burleigh Crockett, who is well known in the automobile industry of New England, has been appointed salesmanager for F. H. [illegible] Company of 16 Columbus ave., agents and distributors of the Lyons-Knight. This car has been represented in this city for the past few months and since the establishment of a distributing agency here has created a most excellent impression. Mr. Crockett is a man well qualified to fill this responsible position as he is perfectly familiar with affairs throughout this section.

PAIGE

The Proof of Paige Supremacy

Paige sales have increased 167.9 per cent in the past two years. This is an unequaled record of the entire automobile industry for this period.

There can no longer be any argument about Paige supremacy in the moderate price field. The public makes its own preference—The public determines which car shall be first choice. It remains with the Public alone to establish leadership in motor cars.

Argue as you will, the public buys that car which it considers best value for the money. Increased sales can only result from increased demand. So, these record figures prove indisputably that the Paige has been selected as a preferred investment by the men who judge automobile values. View the matter from any angle and you must inevitably return to the same conclusion.

Then, consider another point.

Paige cars are sold on merit alone—the only inducement is the car itself. No "inside discounts" or "rake offs" enter into a Paige sales transaction. The Paige list price is in every instance absolutely net—not a mere fiction to be juggled and "arranged" to meet emergencies. Many purchasers of automobiles have been blinded by cut rate inducements, only to learn later that the "bargain" car carries with it "bargain" service and "bargain" quality. Remember, the greatest item of upkeep in any car is depreciation. In the light of common business sense, what can you expect of a car that depreciates from ten to twenty per cent before it leaves the sales room floor?

The Paige Policy

Back of every Paige car is a definite, unfaltering manufacturing policy.

Paige engineers are satisfied with only the best of everything. Most manufacturers in the moderate price field are content, for instance, to equip with a small type of starting and lighting system. The Paige uses the large unit Gray & Davis—a system found on no other car below the $3000 mark.

Most manufacturers in the Paige field are content to use a cone or dry plate clutch. The Paige is equipped with the cork insert multiple disc type—admittedly the most efficient and most expensive clutch construction known to automobile engineers.

Most manufacturers in the Paige field are content to use more or less noisy timing gears for the magneto, cam and pump shafts. The Paige uses the silent chain drive found on the most expensive cars almost exclusively.

And so on—point by point—you will find that the Paige is a car of distinct over values. Paige construction has not been limited by adhering to the so called standards of the moderate price field. The average manufacturer is satisfied with the normal standards of his "price class"—The paige engineers forget every other consideration except quality and adopt the best—regardless of cost or precedent.

As a consequence, the Paige car is a year ahead of its field today. As automobile values go, we firmly believe that the Paige is the most remarkable car in America. And we are not alone in this belief as the overwhelming demand for Paige cars conclusively proves.

If you would be convinced, come in and let us demonstrate the facts. There is nothing mysterious—nothing vague—about Paige quality. The ultra refinements are clearly apparent. They can be seen and named.

THE ORIGIN OF CORD TIRES

This Particular Construction Withstands Most Severe Tests.

"To a one interested in tire eff[illegible] [illegible] race at Indianapolis [illegible] very convincing proof of the ability of the [illegible] construction [illegible] to stand up and take the terrific grind [illegible] strain of better than an [illegible] of speed for 500 miles without [illegible] or serious [illegible] Gibbetts [illegible] take [illegible] results, [illegible] speed to the first [illegible] cars at the top of the [illegible] list.

[illegible] the winner of first money, [illegible] in his De[illegible] three stops for tires and [illegible]

That brings up another interesting fact about these cord tires. In the several tests that have been made the gasoline saving on cars equipped with cord tires frequently runs as high as [illegible] per cent, no small inducement in itself.

[illegible] and Goux, second, third and fourth money winners, respectively, [illegible] the same immunity [illegible] felt the power [illegible] that brings out an [illegible] power [illegible] the engine because of [illegible]

"[illegible] before the race was run the [illegible] tires by experienced [illegible] with demand a tire which will bring out greater engine efficiency was illustrated [illegible] equipped with [illegible] tires could not take the two and one-half mile lap [illegible] less than [illegible] speed. When equipped with Goodrich Silvertown [illegible] lowered its time [illegible] from 1:47 to 1:32 [illegible] it from disqualification to [illegible] the list of entries.

The Goodrich Company is responsible for the adoption but not the origin of the cord tire. The parent cord tire was first made and perfected in England, and quite naturally the foreign cars so conspicuous in the front [illegible] came over equipped with so-called English cords.

The Goodrich Company has the exclusive right to use the cord principle [illegible] tire construction and since introducing the cord [illegible] Silvertown cord tire to America [illegible] has succeeded in arousing [illegible] amount of real tire enthusiasm not equalled since the days of the passing of the single tube and the adoption of the clincher or double tube type."

Motor Car Trip Across Continent

[illegible] schedule laid out for this Saxon which left New York last week calls for crossing the continent [illegible] days [illegible] being due in [illegible] Francisco [illegible] it will [illegible] Independence Day celebration [illegible] its 3,388 [illegible] dipping its front wheels into the Pacific Ocean, [illegible] its rear wheels were driven into the Atlantic. Here also a bottle of water carried from the Atlantic [illegible] will be poured into the Pacific [illegible]

This [illegible] has been officially sanctioned by the Lincoln Highway Association [illegible] the Saxon car that is [illegible] the first automobile to [illegible] the continent over the Lincoln [illegible] continuous run, in addition to being the [illegible] priced car [illegible] to make a transcontinental run [illegible] route.

Among automobile experts this trip [illegible] to show the progress in the art of building automobiles and roads. It is realized that up to a few years [illegible] even the highest-priced [illegible] would hardly have attempted such a strenuous journey.

Concentration Is Secret of Success

"Concentration," says Paul Smith, [illegible] of the Lozier Motor Company, "is the secret of success in automobile advertising whether the [illegible] be local or national in its scope. Scattering ammunition," asserts Mr. Smith, "is the cause of the failure of many an automobile advertising campaign.

"Concentrate [illegible] your hits' (to [illegible] in my [illegible] to the [illegible] automobile dealer, as well as the manufacturer whose business runs [illegible] to the millions yearly. Select [illegible] comparatively few mediums, be sure they are good ones, then use them liberally."

Dealer Becomes Advertising Man

Robert [illegible] the famous [illegible] of the Strongheart Company, who recently became a dealer for Oakland cars and opened the Strongheart garage at Sag Harbor, Long Island, has added to his many accomplishments that of author and advertising writer.

[illegible] recently issued a little booklet which has been [illegible] boosting Oakland cars and his garage business. A humorous chapter gives a list of "Don'ts for Motorists."

Don't be like the average Englishman who says, 'It's a beautiful morning, let's go out and kill something.'"

"You can furnish an inferior grade of cigar when you are touring, providing you increase the speed of the machine.

Don't be too [illegible] the [illegible] sight that you are trying to beat may be the town [illegible]

Don't think the girl in the other car is flirting with you when she waves her hat; she may only be warning you of a trap. It's a good bet either way."

[illegible] also sells motorcycles and he has one of his characters refer to them in a rare bit of the vernacular: "I always thought these poor simps that rode motorcycles were the original cheap skate guys, but if I can't get a runabout, me for the lonely life on one of those stuttering bikes."

GAIN OVER LAST YEAR.

"While business is generally up to expectations, there are certain sections of the country that are exceeding our rosiest hopes," says President George A. K[illegible] of the Kissel Kar. "Milwaukee, Boston and Minneapolis have made great gains over last year, while the entire East and Northwest have sold more than their allotment of cars all along the line."

Window Displays Are Most Valuable

Will Hereafter Be Included in Goodyear Campaign.

This week, in the show windows of more than 10,000 tire and car dealers of the country are to be seen artistic displays of Goodyear tires and accessories, pennants, etc. It is the [illegible] of the national window display campaign the Goodyear Tire & Rubber Company has been waging for several weeks past, and its phenomenal success and the enthusiasm shown throughout have surprised even those who planned and executed the campaign.

This event is regarded as evidence that tire dealers have entered heartily into the spirit of twentieth century merchandising, that they have come to appreciate the value in dollars and cents, of intelligent window display of their wares. For years there had been an underground feeling that while window displays were [illegible] valuable in dry goods and [illegible] lines, they were not applicable or valuable in the tire business.

Over twenty-five carloads of display material, besides tires and accessories themselves, were shipped to various parts of the country for the campaign, weighing about [illegible] tons, and the entire event is regarded as one of the most significant in the history of tire salesmanship.

Efficient Brakes Are Essential

"The proper attention to brakes and practical working steel would eliminate many of the motor truck accidents which are now pronounced unavoidable," states John N. Willys, manufacturer of the Garford and Willys-Utility trucks.

"Tests on a Willys-Utility in actual service, show that under full speed with a load of three-quarter ton the vehicle can be brought to a stop within thirty feet [illegible] application of the brakes. It is equipped with an automatic governor [illegible] the owner can regulate the speed of his truck. The most reckless or careless driver is unable to drive faster than eighteen miles an hour, which is the speed our [illegible] have proved the highest practicable for a truck of this capacity."

Y., will [illegible] its contention for convict road camps and farms. Mr. Osborne [illegible] that the prison bars [illegible] should relax the iron discipline [illegible] degrading, unsuccessful system [illegible] and punishment [illegible] a system fair [illegible] freedom, and [illegible]

Mr. Osborne [illegible] voluntarily served a sentence to encourage by his self-sacrifice the prisoners at Auburn who have organized a Mutual Welfare League through which fourteen hundred men have become responsible for much of their own discipline. The men have stood severe tests since the organization of the league for on one occasion, when the fourteen hundred were out of their cells marching to the chapel, the electric power at the prison gave out and the prison was plunged into darkness, yet not one man attempted riot or escape—a miracle in the eyes of the officials, but the natural result of the trust reposed in them, according to Mr. Osborne.

"LOADING UP."

Gasoline leaves the carbureter as a spray of liquid. In the intake manifold it vaporizes and becomes mixed with air. When vaporization does not take place rapidly enough, or when the mixture is sprayed [illegible] the liquid will accumulate on the sides and run into the carbureter. To get best results the intake manifold should be protected from the cooling effect of the fan and should be warmed by [illegible] of heat from the exhaust. When the gasoline in liquid form runs down into the air inlet of the carbureter the mixture will be irregular and uncertain.

Bay State Automobile Association Will Spend the 17th at the Seashore.

The [illegible] outing of the Bay State Automobile Association will be held at the Farragut House, Rye Beach, on Tuesday and Wednesday next. It has long been the custom of this association to spend the 17th of June away from the city where its members [illegible] to forget business cares and other affairs and to become boys and girls again.

The outing this year is necessarily foreshortened by the fact that the 17th comes the middle of the week, but this will not prevent in any way the securing of the maximum of [illegible] out of the outing. Twenty [illegible] members and friends of the organization will journey to the [illegible] arriving there [illegible] to enjoy dinner together, after which dancing and other pleasures will be enjoyed.

Wednesday morning the "annual golf game" is scheduled, but this year the attendance at the [illegible] will be greatly [illegible] with by the many private matches which are to be decided upon [illegible] the great majority of the members having of late years become devotees of golf. After lunch comes the drive home.

President Stevens of the club and Chairman Walter Williams of the runs and tours committee have so planned that there will not be a dull moment during the outing and those who participate in the same will have no cause for regret.

WHY IS A BLOW-OUT?

When outside wear or a made break in the fabric due to bruises produces a comparatively weak place in a casing, the inside pressure causes a bulge in the location of the weak spot and this spot is then exposed to more wear in travel than the sound parts of the casing. Of course the blow-out quickly follows. Strong inner-liners prevent this bulging, making a slight depression at the worn spot in place of a bulge, and thus preventing excessive wear on the weak portion of the casing.

Students Insist on Racing Cars

So gradually [illegible] the automobile become a part [illegible] pleasure that a poll of the various seats of knowledge shows the surprising figures of one motor car to every twenty-two students.

Practically every fraternity at every college or university has a battery of motor cars [illegible] so far there have been no intercollegiate races, but [illegible] assistant sales manager of the F. B. Stearns Company, Cleveland, O., predicts that five years hence will see such events securely fastened in the roster of college sport.

DANGEROUS SKIDDING.

The expert driver can skilfully use skidding to [illegible] his car where he wishes it to be, but an amateur usually skids [illegible] Many of the accidents of automobile use are due to unexpected skidding by inexperienced drivers. To control a skid it requires quick perception of the coming [illegible] and prompt action to counteract it. Brakes are usually unsymmetrical in their effects, and putting on the brake usually increases the skid, especially if the power is left in.

CHANDLER

LIGHT-WEIGHT SIX

Ten per cent more power and many refinements

We announce the new 1915 Chandler at a new profit-sharing price, $1595. Deliveries will begin at once. Our first shipment is here now.

Refined in many details, embodying marked improvements, and with more power, what of its leadership now, for 1915, at this new price!

Search far and wide, and you cannot find like value in any other car at any similar price.

There are no radical changes in the Chandler design for 1915. There could not be, for the Chandler had already attained seemingly the ultimate in engineering. Owners all over America declared they could not hope for better service from any car.

There are no experiments in the car.

But, throughout, we have effected refinements. We have added 10% to the power.

Our engineers and designers have perfected many improvements.

The 1915 pure streamline body, sweeping in unbroken lines from the bow of the tonneau to the deep Mayo radiator, makes the Chandler the last word in motor car beauty.

And the Chandler company—prosperous because of the mechanical perfection of its product and freedom from expensive experimental work and changes, and because of its low overhead expense—is dividing its profits with Chandler purchasers. This fact, and this only, makes possible the new 1915 price, $1595.

Giant Steamer Amerika in First Trip to Boston

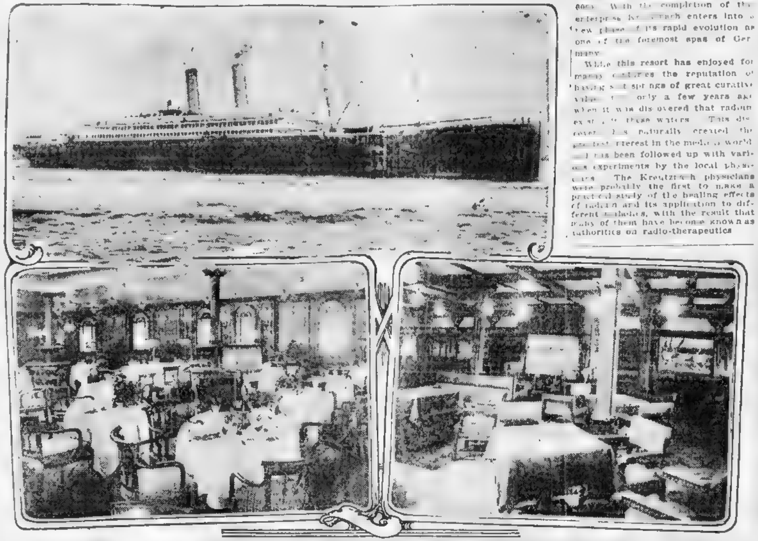
Big Hamburg-American Liner to Dock Friday

VIEW OF AMERIKA, HER MAIN DINING SALOON AND SMOKING ROOM



Hub Officials Arrange Reception to Celebrate Advent of Big Steamer in Hub Service.

The Hamburg-American liner Amerika, which left Hamburg Wednesday on her first trip to Boston, is due to tie up at the Commonwealth Docks on Friday or Saturday. The Amerika is now the largest ship to enter the Boston transatlantic service.

Boston steamship officials are planning a reception upon the arrival of the big [illegible] to signalize the advent of the steamship into the local service. The Amerika has a large passenger list, including Joseph A. Maynard, surveyor of the port, who has been making a study of European port [illegible].

The dimensions of the America are: Length, 687 feet; beam, 74 feet 6 inches; depth, 53 feet. Her displacement at full load draught is over 42,000 tons. The vessel is planned to be the highest type of passenger and freight vessel ever built, having great promenade decks, large cabins with lower berths only, grand combinations of suites and a well-equipped restaurant.

MAKES 18 KNOTS AN HOUR.

In the dining saloon small party tables have been provided in place of the long tables and an a la carte service has been added. There are also [illegible] Turkish and electric baths, [illegible] passenger elevators [illegible] five decks.

[illegible] of these ships is about [illegible] knots an hour. It has accommodations for 4,000 persons, including a crew of 600 officers and [illegible] accommodates 420 first-class, [illegible] second cabin, 300 third [illegible] intermediate passengers and [illegible] the steerage. The "intermediate" [illegible] is something entirely new, and was introduced to meet a demand for accommodations not as expensive as second cabin but better than steerage.

LARGE DINING ROOM.

The third cabin is equipped with rooms for two, four and six persons, and has a large dining room. The hull is provided with a double bottom as a safeguard in case of grinding. Above this double bottom there are water-tight steel bulkheads extending to the upper deck. The engine compartment, which is the largest in the ship, is divided by a longitudinal bulkhead. These water-tight compartments make the ship practically unsinkable. All the bulkhead doors can be closed in a few seconds, either individually or collectively, from the captain's bridge. The entrance of water into any one or several of the compartments would automatically close the bulkhead doors [illegible] compartments affected in the event of any [illegible] in the connection with the bridge.

Germany's Largest Summer Hotel Opens

KREUTZNACH, Germany, June 13.—The largest and most luxurious kurhaus (casino) in Germany and one of the most [illegible] Summer hotels in this country was opened in this famous spa at a cost for the building of upwards of [illegible] marks ($400,000). With the completion of this enterprise Kreutznach enters into a new phase of its rapid evolution as one of the foremost spas of Germany.

While this resort has enjoyed for many centuries the reputation of having hot springs of great curative value, it was only a few years ago when it was discovered that radium exists in these waters. This discovery has naturally created the greatest interest in the medical world and has been followed up with various experiments by the local physicians. The Kreutznach physicians were probably the first to make a practical study of the healing effects of radium and its application to different maladies, with the result that many of them have become known as authorities on radio-therapeutics.

*Batted for Hall [illegible]

DETROIT, June 13.—Manager Jennings of the Tigers had only one pitcher in uniform who had not been used against the Red Sox when today's game had ended with a score of 8 to 6 in favor of the visitors. Yes, worse than that, he had only two players in uniform whose names did not appear in the lineup.

Coveleskie, southpaw, worked yesterday and had his day off today. John Williams is sick. George Boehler was the only Tiger pitcher left when the game ended and he had been warming up in the bull pen. Oscar Vitt, infielder, was the only other player who did not get into the game.

The Tigers were on a [illegible] page and they gathered fifteen hits off Bedient [illegible] running [illegible] only six runs. The Red Sox got fewer hits [illegible] but the Jennings pitchers were so wild that there was always one or more men on the bases ready to score whenever a Boston boy hit safely.

PITCHERS WERE WILD.

Bedient and Cavet started against each other. The Tigers batted Bedient out of the box in the fourth inning. They had taken him for three clean singles in the third, but had failed to score.

They got him for three more in the fourth and then he sought the showers. Collins, who relieved him, pitched fair ball.

The Tigers furnished the real thrill of the game by a startling ninth inning rally. Cobb walked and went to second on Crawford's infield out. Veach skied. Then came the bombardment. With four runs needed to tie Kavanaugh doubled and [illegible] singled, scoring two. [illegible] pinch hitter, [illegible] Baker another pinch hitter flied out. The Sox were late in getting started with their pitcher wreckers, but they did a record job when they got going.

YERKES' TRIPLE WASTED.

Cavet blew in the sixth. Main replaced him. He lasted only into the seventh. Dauss [illegible] but could not get [illegible] over the plate. Dubuc batted for Dauss in the eighth and Reynolds started pitching the ninth. He passed two men and Hall succeeded him.

There was a lot of hitting by both clubs but not much of the [illegible] kind. Yerkes got a triple that was wasted and [illegible] triple that counted two runs. Cobb and Kavanaugh got doubles but the other hits were [illegible].

Bush was the [illegible] fielder of the day, robbing Lewis of one hit and making several well stops and throws.

SOX SCORE IN FIRST.

Cavet's wildness proved to [illegible] the Red Sox right [illegible] Hooper, the first man up, walked. Scott flied out, but Speaker drew another pass. Lewis inserted a single to Moriarty.

YANKEES WERE FAVORITES, BUT THE BRITISH SWAMPED THEM

By DAMON RUNYON.

MEADOW BROOK PARK, Westbury, N. Y., June 13.—This is a polo story that cannot open with the old familiar American eagle's screech of triumph. It is not that kind of a story. It is a sad story.

Four blue-shirted, wiry English soldiers galloped at will over a large green field at Meadow Brook this afternoon, pursuing a small white pellet back and forth across the most cherished polo goals in all this country.

They were resisted to a trifling extent by the remnants of America's famous "big four," but if that is the ablest resistance the [illegible] can offer, the Hurlingham Club may just as well clear a place on the old mantelpiece for the celebrated polo trophy.

Not that one game makes a trophy, of course, but the result this afternoon was considerably depressing. The polo pride of the land of the free and home of the brave was slaughtered to make a British holiday and all we can do about it is to challenge England to another contest.

EASILY WINS BIG BATTLE.

In the immortal language of a prominent member of the Hempstead fire department, "they just naturally chuckled the daylights out of us."

The score was England 8½, America 3, and that is esteemed some licking as they reckon [illegible] in the polo world.

One smashing gallop after another. That's the way they did it. The English seemed to have grabbed a leaf out of America's last year book when Harry Payne Whitney and his men rode rough shod over the British. It was the other way around this season, only the Britons seemed to be shod a trifle rougher than the Yankees last year.

BRAVES

By A. H. C. MITCHELL.

In a rip-roaring, heart-tearing game of ball, the Braves performed the unexpected by winning the battle, 4 to 3, thus taking four straight from the Pirates. One year ago on their first trip to Boston, the Buccaneers lost four straight games, for the first time to a Hub team in ten years or more.

When the present series opened, hardly a man in this vicinity believed it would be possible for the Boston team to repeat the trick. But the trick was repeated, and after the game Stallings and his players were slapped on the back and made much of by the "fans" who rushed on the field and surrounded them.

DOUBLE STEAL WINS GAME.

It was a most exciting game of ball featured by the sharpest kind of [illegible] unexpected turns and good [illegible] at the right time. Three [illegible] the battle the score was tied, but finally in the last of the eighth inning, a daring double steal executed by Mann and Gowdy sent the winning run over the plate. [illegible] pitched fine ball, and the one run that the Braves had when the eighth opened appeared to be enough to bring home the bacon. But, with two out in this round, the southpaw inadvertently grooved a fast ball for Konetchy. The Bohemian met it with his bat and sent it on a line far over Mann's head and into the runway that adjoins the centre field bleachers for a clean home run.

This tied the score [illegible] the Braves came back [illegible] half with a double steal [illegible] the game. The Pirates [illegible] run in the fourth [illegible] and Konetchy [illegible] centre but the Braves [illegible] the last half [illegible] and two outs.

PIRATES COUNT IN FIFTH.

Pittsburgh [illegible] the fifth [illegible] course of [illegible] Braves came [illegible] lifted [illegible] Gowdy and [illegible] allowing the lanky catcher to drop the ball.

A large Saturday crowd of [illegible] saw the fun and it was kept at fever heat by the closeness of the score.

The Chicago Cubs will arrive in town this afternoon and on Monday

[illegible] Bebe Janvrin tried to sacrifice, but Cavet was generous and fumbled the ball, filling the bases. Gardner forced Janvrin, Speaker scoring. Gardner was then nipped off first and run down.

The Tigers threatened in the first inning when Cobb doubled with two out, but Crawford couldn't drive him home.

Three Tiger singles went to waste in the third. Stanage got a clean hit through the box to start. Cavet forced him. Bush singled to centre. Moriarty popped out. Cobb hit a hot grounder to Janvrin and Bedient failed to cover the bag, Cobb getting credit for a hit. Crawford couldn't [illegible], flying out.

GARDENR GETS A HIT.

The Detroit gang broke loose in the fourth. Veach, first up, was safe on Gardner's hurried throw that pulled Janvrin off the bag. Kavanaugh, Burns and Stanage got singles in a row, scoring Veach and Kavanaugh. Here Manager Carrigan wig wagged Collins in and replaced Bedient. He got Cavet and Bush, but Moriarty's single scored Burns.

The Tigers made it four runs in the fifth on singles by Veach and Kavanaugh and Burns' long sacrifice fly to Lewis.

The Bengal lead didn't last long, however. Cavet went wild in the sixth and walked Speaker and Lewis. Janvrin singled to Moriarty, filling the bases. Jennings thought his southpaw had enough by this time and sent in big Marc Main.

Gardner singled, scoring Speaker and Lewis and tying the score. Gardner was caught off first and Janvrin died when Yerkes failed to hit on the squeeze. Yerkes then grounded out.

The Sox knocked Main out of the box and got two more runs in the seventh.

SOX SCORE FOUR MORE.

With one out Collins walked. Hooper [illegible] Rehg, and Scott [illegible] the bags. With this [illegible] George Dauss went to work. He could not find the plate for Speaker and forced in Collins. [illegible]

The Sox added two more in the ninth on one hit. Reynolds, who replaced Dauss in the box, passed Scott and Speaker. Hall replaced Reynolds. Lewis sacrificed and Janvrin hit to Moriarty, who caught Scott at the plate. Gardner tripled to the bleachers in right, scoring Speaker and Janvrin.

HARVARD WINS FROM PENN BY TIMELY HITTING

Second Game of Series Goes to Crimson Nine by the Score of 7 to 6.

MAHAN DRIVEN FROM BOX

By OTTO B. HANSON.

Harvard squared matters with the University of Pennsylvania baseball team yesterday afternoon at Soldiers Field by winning an uphill battle 7 to 6. It was the last game for Harvard previous to the opening game of the series with Yale and the work of the Crimson team was none too encouraging.

The weakness of the pitching department was shown up but a surprise was sprung on the followers of the Harvard nine.

Eddie Mahan who is the hope of Harvard to defeat Yale, was treated unmercifully by the Red and Blue batsmen and his retirement from the game was in the fifth inning when the Penn batters drove five large runs over the rubber.

The surprise was the work of Whitney, who was sent in to pitch after Mahan. This was the first opportunity that Whitney has had to work on the mound at Cambridge this season and he proved to be worth while.

PITCHED AGAINST ODDS.

He went into pitch with all odds against him, but he was cool and collected at all times and held the Penn batters to three widely scattered hits in six innings. He was a bit wild, however as is the trouble with all of the Harvard pitchers and gave five base on balls.

The game was slowly played and uninteresting to watch, and but for some timely batting by both teams the game went along almost featureless.

Harvard took a two run lead in the second inning. Ayres led off with a clean single. Hardwick was victim of strikes but Gannett came through with a fine double that scored the husky third baseman. Mahan sent a fly to centre but Minds dropped the ball and allowed Gannett to score all the way from second. Mahan was out trying to get two bases on the error. Milholland reached third when Williams threw over the first baseman's head, but the inning closed when Waterman rapped to the pitcher.

Penn bunched four of its hits in the third inning and five runs were chalked up. Sayre was first up and an easy out, but Mann singled, Haley got free transportation, Irwin tripled to centre. Minds was out. Williams was passed and successive singles by Schwert and Wallace all counted in the run getting.

Harvard scored two more runs in the fourth inning. Ayres was safe when Williams allowed his hit to get by him and advanced to second when Hardwick got a pass. Gannett attempted to sacrifice, but was safe when Schwert threw low to first base, filling the bases. Whitney walked and Ayres was forced over the plate. Milholland struck out and Frye, who batted for Waterman, fouled to the catcher. Nash singled, however, and scored Gannett.

SINGLE FOR WINGATE.

Wingate led off the fifth inning with a single, but was out stealing. Clark sacrificed. Ayres was an easy out, but Hardwick rapped safely to centre and Clark crossed the pan. Gannett walked, as did Whitney, and a safe drive by Milholland scored Hardwick and Gannett with the runs that were enough to win the game.

Penn's last tally was rather lucky. After one was out Wallace slapped a fine hit to right field and Gannett fell in beating the ball and the Penn batsman reached third on the error and scored on a long fly to Gannett by Sayres.

HERCULOID WINS CLYDE PARK FEATURE

Society Crowd Sees First Day's Racing at Country Club

By FRED HOEY.

Beautiful surroundings, a typical Country Club crowd and splendid weather, except near the end of the program, were satisfactory conditions at the first day's racing of the annual Country Club meeting at Clyde Park, Brookline. But from a racing standpoint, the events, for the most part, were a distinct disappointment.

Free scratching of horses from the various events robbed the meet of much interest. It was not until the final race of the day, which was won by Herculoid, that the spectators were furnished with good competition. In the sixth race there were five starters, while the other races had but two and three starters to go to the post.

The track was soft and to this is attributed the fact that so many owners withdrew their entries apparently holding their horses in reserve for the high class program on June 17.

The day was not without its mishaps. Two riders failed to negotiate jumps properly and both were thrown, but fortunately the men did not suffer injury. In the third race, for the Myopia Hunt Cup, Lewis riding Gold Plate, failed to make the gravel jump at the gravel pit and he was thrown. In the fourth race, at the same point, Kermath, astride Bryndown, went to the ground with his horse, but managed to [illegible] of the filly.

The best race of the day, the sixth for the Middlesex Hunt Cup, brought five horses to the post. Herculoid the favorite, jumped [illegible] the first quarter and for a lap around the jumps had a merry fight with Lampblack.

Reaching the water jump [illegible] head, Herculoid negotiated [illegible] ful jump and gathering speed was nearly a length away from Lampblack before another quarter was covered. Three times around these runners flew, close together with Indicator third [illegible] Octette fifth.

Herculoid held the length lead to the finish, but Dulcare, running a strong race and with a five-yard lead on Octette, went lame as she approached the flat and had to relinquish the position to Octette.

The most popular win of [illegible] was recorded in favor of B[illegible] piloted by Billy Henry. Henry is well known to followers of the runners as a rider of twenty years ago and has not had a mount at the Country Club for years. His [illegible] of yesterday was appreciated by the crowd. He covered the course in 5m., two seconds behind the record for the track.

It was in this race that Bryndown fell at the gravel pit, and many believe [illegible] this mishap, [illegible] would have been [illegible]. Footles [illegible] at Big Sand at Piping Rock, L. I., a week ago, finished second.

The only protest registered came at the conclusion of the fifth race when [illegible] Lewis [illegible] the race against Willing, ridden by Wright. Lewis had a pair of torn pants to show for alleged crowding but he was forced to take second position with [illegible].

This race was on the flat and proved a very good [illegible] [illegible] the last quarter of the [illegible] [illegible] finish.

The opening event proved [illegible] easy [illegible] for Calvert, who [illegible] up. Right from the start Calvert held off the other starters, Miss [illegible] and Small Package. [illegible] Miss [illegible] battle for second place [illegible] for [illegible].

Splendid riding by [illegible] with Abden gave him the [illegible] Down East Steeplechase.

With rapid pace W. J. McDonald's Demarest, the winner of many blue ribbons and one of the favorite pacers at the Charles River Speedway, ran a splendid race at the weekly matinee of the Metropolitan Driving Club, but failed to beat her time of 2 17 in a mile heat. Driven by the owner, the pacer presented an excellent exhibition and paced by A. J. Furbush's Enoch W. and Jr. Dan Patch, owned by H. B. Ralston, went over the half-mile course in 2 17¼.

The pacers followed close to Demarest throughout the heat, but an east wind blowing over the track, in addition to the track being well cut up by the previous runners, prevented her from breaking her time.

Eleven trotting and pacing races—some of [illegible] heats—made up the card of the afternoon, which brought out a large gallery. Class I, pacing race proved another feature of the afternoon. The race went four heats and was won by Dr. C. A. Thompson's Spim, with Billy Baggs second, and Maple March, owned by A. C. Furbush, third.

Says Harvard Batsmen Should Bring Victory in Series to the Crimson—Have Saved the Nine All Season by Hitting

Expert Scores College Coaches, Because of Neglect to Teach Their Teams the Necessary Art of How to Hit the Ball

Written expressly for the Boston Sunday American

By WALTER CAMP

Harvard and Yale will meet to settle the baseball issue on June 16 at New Haven, June 17 at Cambridge and in case of a tie June 20 in Boston.

The baseball contests between these two old rivals last year were of the very closest character. Yale won the college championship by reeling off something like seventeen games straight and defeated Princeton in ten innings at New Haven 4 to 3, then played a six-inning unfinished game at Princeton 0 to 0, and followed it with another game at Princeton which was not decided until twelve innings had been played, Yale then winning 5 to 4.

But in the Yale-Harvard series Yale won the first game 2 to 0 at New Haven, Harvard the second in fourteen innings at Cambridge 4 to 2, and Yale the deciding game in New York 6 to 5. This year conditions are considerably altered. Harvard has had an early record of a far higher standard of play than last season, while Yale has been playing a game of decided in-and-out character.

HARVARD HAS HARD HITTERS.

The first four batters, as they lead off in the line-up of the Harvard nine have certainly done remarkably good work with the stick. Nash, Wingate, Clark and Ayers are hitting the ball hard and making it uncomfortable for any pitcher.

In fact, it is the batting of Harvard this year that is winning them their way to the top. It seems extraordinary that coaches of college teams do not realize [illegible] spend more time on the batting.

Wherever it has been done it has produced a winning nine and yet coaches allow their men to [illegible] batting in mid season, and instead of abandoning all fielding and concentrating on [illegible] weakness they [illegible] the dangers to become more and more serious. Lack of confidence results and what is promised to be a championship nine goes dropping down the list with startling rapidity. Penn and Harvard have headed the list this year in work with the stick but it has been of two different types. Penn has some hard hitters, but all of them can hit the ball and when a squeeze play is needed their bunting is perfect.

Harvard hits them out harder and is not as expert in the bunting game. Both methods are, however, of the same principle, namely that a college nine should win its games largely with their batting; that there is no remarkable difference in two college nines as the game goes in fielding day out and day in, so that the chances of victory rest largely in the ability to hit.

YALE WEAK AT BAT.

It was that which distinguished Yale's nine last year throughout the season until almost the very end, and at the end they slid off somewhat. This year they have had some sporadic flurries of hitting but for the most part have been extremely weak in [illegible] game repeatedly [illegible] tests [illegible] the opportunity to bring two runs home [illegible] hit with no one out or [illegible] and still leaving men [illegible].

Mahan did the pitching for Harvard against Princeton, and kept them down in the Cambridge game to five hits, and it [illegible] as if he would be a difficult [illegible] for Yale. He has given few [illegible].

It was the [illegible] of Princeton [illegible] did the effective work [illegible] bat against Harvard at Cambridge, Boston, Wall and Deyo bunching their hits and securing Princeton's only run. Yale as already stated, has been [illegible] with the bat during the season, and while occasionally there have been brilliant streaks of fielding there have also been some shocking errors. [illegible] two exceptions [illegible] the same makeup as [illegible] that fell off [illegible] of [illegible] and therefore [illegible] springing hope [illegible] of their supporters that [illegible] come back. Yale [illegible] old game in the [illegible] New Haven, but even [illegible] was not enough to [illegible] and a squeeze play [illegible] the twelfth inning brought them victory.

Yale has developed an additional pitcher in Way, who has filled in the gap well. Gile has pitched one or two excellent games, notably Pennsylvania and Holy Cross, but was hit hard at Cornell at a fatal moment in the Princeton game at New Haven and neither he nor Brown has stepped up to the standard of last season [illegible] looks as if [illegible] should enter the contest [illegible].

DOHERTY VS. LARNED—1902.

One of the most interesting tennis matches that ever was played in this country was for the Davis Cup at the Crescent Athletic Club in 1902. The American team finally won but the contest [illegible] Larned and Doherty [illegible] of thrills. The day before [illegible] to the rain, Larned [illegible] two sets from Doherty [illegible] next day, the dry court [illegible] sunshine apparently brought back Doherty's skill and confidence. With two sets to love against him, the Englishman played as though the match were just beginning. Larned struggled valiantly but seemed [illegible] and never [illegible] the score went [illegible] Englishman [illegible] games [illegible] rapidity. In the next set [illegible] got a game [illegible] won his [illegible] giving the [illegible] set at 6-4 although [illegible] Larned, fighting [illegible] staved off defeat [illegible] had actually called [illegible] than seven times. [illegible] two sets all. Larned [illegible] his old speed in the last set and led at 2-1. The Englishman then made it 2-2 and followed this up to the dismay of the onlookers, by taking the fifth game against the American service, which lead, as in the former set, he managed to keep to the end and thus he secured the match, the last game being a love game.

NEW AUCTION BRIDGE RULES.

Lovers of auction bridge should note that the Portland Club of London has issued the following [illegible].

If the [illegible] not completed stakes will be paid on completed games and the winner of each game scores 125 (half the rubber allowance) above the line.

[illegible] have been ignored in this issue of changes. In fact it is understood that it was not even mentioned at the meetings.

The name of the game has been finally fixed as "Royal Auction Bridge," distinguishing it from auction bridge in which spades count 2, clubs 4, diamonds 6, hearts 8, no trumps 12. The grand slam has been raised from 40 to 100, and the little slam from 20 to 50, to keep them in proportion to the reward for winning the game. As the grand slam is worth 40 at bridge where the reward for the game is 100, it should be increased to 100 at royal auction where the reward for the game is 250. They have also [illegible] except spades at 2 and royals.

BIKE CHAMPION WILL RACE HERE

Kramer Meets Goullet at Revere Beach Track Tuesday Night.

Frank Kramer, the champion of all champs, and the man who has held world's title in the bicycle sprint game for twelve consecutive years after meeting all comers, will make his only appearance in New England this week when he meets Alfred Goullet, the Australian title holder at the Revere Beach oval next Tuesday evening.

Kramer stands out today in the cycle game like John L. Sullivan did in the good old days when the big fellow was king of them all. The New Jersey wheelman is still on the job [illegible] willing to meet all comers and although having ridden for more than eighteen years, he declares he will continue until he is fifty.

In speaking of his long career as a bike rider and his plans for the future, Kramer said yesterday:

Yes, I suppose it is unique in the annals of sport for a man to hang on to first place as long as I have. But the fact is I have been riding since 1896, and now, after eighteen years, I face prospects of the hardest Summer campaign of racing.

Bicycle racing has been a fixture at Vailsburg and Newark for a long time, but renewed interest in the sport is beginning to assert itself throughout the East.

A new track has been built at Providence, and, with tracks at Boston and New Haven, the National Cycling Association circuit is beginning to get back where it was when the cycling craze was at its height in the late nineties.

Next Fall I race Rutt at Copenhagen for the world's championship, but there it is a case of a big field, with the poorest rider standing almost as good a chance as the best.

PITCHING CHANGE SCARES EVERETT

[illegible] Harwood pitching gilt edged ball, having held Manchester High to three hits and one run in seven innings at Everett High field yesterday, errors by Green and Fitzgerald put two runners on the bases and Coach O'Donnell yanked his twirler and substituted Pierotti. The change nearly cost Everett the game, as Pierotti hit the next batter and issued two passes giving the New Hampshire nine three runs.

Malden Is Easy for Somerville

Somerville High easily defeated Malden High in a Suburban League game at Malden yesterday 7 to 1. It was a meeting of the league leader with the tail ender and the result was as expected. Malden's [illegible] run was scored in the ninth inning due to a series of errors by the Somerville infielders which allowed Flanders to score.

CARMAN VICTOR IN REVERE RACE

Didier Loses Pace When About to Cut Down Winner's Lead; Collins Is Third.

Losing his pace on the twelfth mile when it appeared as if he would cut down the lead, Leon Didier, the French champion, was beaten by Clarence Carman of Jamaica, L. I., in the 30-mile motor paced race at the Revere cycle track last night, which was witnessed by 10,000 people.

On the second mile with his machine apparently running in perfect form, Didier suddenly lost control of the big speeder and he crashed into the crowd in the oval.

The accident occurred coming down the stretch so that those on the edge of the oval managed to escape injury. The Frenchman was soon on his feet again, and grabbing another motor at hand, started a mad pursuit after the New Yorker.

When the riders were covering the twelfth mile, Didier lost his pace and before he could recover Carman gained another lap, giving him a margin of three, which he maintained to the end.

While all this was going on Collins was losing ground on every lap, until at the finish he was ten laps behind. Carman's time was 40 minutes 30 2-5 seconds.

The summary:

30-mile motor race—Won by Clarence Carman, New York; second, Leon Didier, Paris, France; third, Elmer Collins, Lynn. Time—40m. 30 4-5s.

Wakefield's Errors Do Not Stop Victory

Wakefield High and Reading High decided the tie for last place in the Middlesex League at Wakefield yesterday and despite a comedy of errors on the part of the Wakefield boys, they won by a score of 10 to 7.

It was anybody's game up the seventh, when Wakefield slammed out three runs and repeated in the eighth. Reading came back strong in the ninth, but after scoring two runs, the side was retired in one, two, three order. The score:

GOLF

By H. P. FARRINGTON

VINCENT S. LAWRENCE of Woodland [illegible] well to hand [illegible] Thursday morning at [illegible] auto to Wollaston and win the 18 hole [illegible] of the Boston Athletic Association's annual championship in the afternoon.

A FEW years ago there was a stripling paired with Walter J. Travis for the annual Country Club tourney. The former was full of [illegible] under the redoubtable veteran. Travis won the low score prize and V. S. Lawrence had nothing to say, for he was the stripling. Today Lawrence is playing about as good golf as any golfer in the State, and is fulfilling some of his own predictions.

BUNKER HILL DAY will be celebrated appropriately by the golfers [illegible]. Most of them [illegible] smokeless [illegible] a lose [illegible] hole [illegible] golfer's vocabulary is stirring up the atmosphere.

I MADE an error in announcing the competition for the John Shepard, Jr., Cup. It will be qualified for July 11, and instead of his being a resident of Boston, Mr. Shepard wishes it to be known that Providence [illegible] The cup [illegible] of the enormous trophy offered.

LOCAL and members tourneys are in order for Bunker Hill day. Lexington, with its numerous other patriotic celebrations, has an open amateur competition scheduled at the golf club, and this event should bring out a classy field.

IT is interesting to note with both [illegible] Herreshoff back from the other side that they have little to offer in the way of excuses for America's invaders. Golfers love a cheerful loser, and from reports all of the United States players filled [illegible].

I WAS watching a large piece of [illegible].

IT was rather a long trip that J. [illegible] McDermott [illegible] to [illegible] British [illegible] certain factors to rely upon [illegible] wants to make close connections.

LACK of knowledge of the rules should cause Jessie Guilford the New Hampshire State champion and [illegible] read the book containing them through. He was disqualified at Belmont for not knowing the lost ball rule, which seems almost unbelievable for a man who holds a State title.

I ASKED Guilford if he had ever lost [illegible].

THERE were others that thought as [illegible] where the other had been lost. For the edification of those who do not [illegible].

LAWRENCE WINS IN BELMONT PLAY

By H. P. FARRINGTON.

Vincent S. Lawrence of Woodland fulfilled the predictions of his friends by winning the open three-day golf tourney at the Belmont Springs C. C. yesterday. He defeated in turn P. W. Dunbar of Winchester and H. H. Cook of Albemarle in the semi-final rounds, continuing the good golf that has marked his play throughout the tourney.

Lawrence won by a wide margin in the morning, but was harder pressed by Cook in the afternoon. It will be remembered that Cook and Lawrence tied on Tuesday for the low gross honors in the qualification, and it was quite appropriate that each should work their way through to the final and settle all disputes as to supremacy in an important match.

There were no brilliant scores in the three matches played. Lawrence showed some good match play holes and was consistent with a string of fours throughout the day. He was out in 41 in the morning and one over an average of fours for the inward holes played. In the afternoon he was out in 40, four over fours for the inward holes played.

The cards of the final:

Lawrence, out. 5 4 4 5 4 4 5 6 3—40

Cook, in........5 5 5 6 3 4 5 5 4—42

Lawrence, in.. 4 5 5 5 5 5 3

Cook, in 6 6 5 4 5 5 4

Bye holes not played.

One of the prettiest shots of the round was Lawrence's approach at the sixth, where Cook had reached the green in two perfect shots. Lawrence was in the long grass to the right in 2, but put his next dead, and secured a half in 4. Lawrence played [illegible] pretty approach at the ninth, [illegible] a three at this difficult [illegible].

The match ended on the short sixteenth, where Cook found the bunker from the tee while Lawrence was within [illegible] distance for a possible [illegible]. A three was good enough to win and Lawrence ended the match [illegible].

YALE BEATS HARVARD IN LAST TIME TRIAL

GREAT ANNUAL RIVER BATTLE PROMISES TO BE CLOSEST IN MANY YEARS

GALE'S FERRY, Ct., June 13.—Yale and Harvard today finished time rows on the Thames for the season. Yale rowed two miles and Harvard rowed three. Yale rowed about 6:30 o'clock and Harvard about 7:30, Harvard having the better conditions because the head wind, against which Yale rowed, had died down.

Yale's time for the two miles was [illegible] minutes, 58 seconds. Harvard's for the three miles was 15 minutes, [illegible] seconds. Harvard's time for the first two miles was 11 minutes, 7 seconds, which is 9 seconds slower than Yale's mark for the course, giving Yale honors of the final time try over part of the course.

Had Yale continued its time row and maintained the same pace with which they covered the two miles they must have covered it in about 22 minutes. Had Harvard continued its time trial to four miles at the rate it rowed three it would not have registered a better record than 22 minutes, 45 seconds.

STATE FAILS AS 'MOTHER,' SAYS REV. DR. CONRAD

Points to Mount Hope Institution as Model in Care of "Nobody's Child."

"The State is a failure as a mother of homeless children. She is too speculative, mathematical and mechanical"—So declares Rev. Dr. A. Z. Conrad, pastor of Park Street Church.

Dr. Conrad has been studying the problem of "nobody's child" in larger cities. He thinks the small institution, even with limited means, is doing today a better moral work for the [illegible] than the State with all its institutions for such unfortunates.

He [illegible] Mount Hope Home, which [illegible] administration [illegible] true home atmosphere [illegible] devotion of sympathetic [illegible]

[illegible] child [illegible] the affection [illegible] which a parent would give. The little life committed [illegible] regarded as [illegible] a sacred trust. The [illegible] of [illegible] has [illegible] influence, [illegible] fails unless [illegible] of some individual home where proper culture, physical, mental and spiritual, is provided.

DEVELOP BEST IMPULSES.

No matter how exalted the ideals [illegible] the child [illegible] period of childhood is kept [illegible] It should [illegible] of every society or institution [illegible] for children to seek [illegible] blessing and benefit of [illegible] soul [illegible] the period of early [illegible] both [illegible] will be given to the very best impulses, instincts and faculties in the individual life.

[illegible] the State is compelled [illegible] and [illegible] parental obligations [illegible] not voluntarily [illegible] other [illegible] the State should [illegible] must protect [illegible] of [illegible] could [illegible] to society [illegible] the State [illegible] will save untold expenditure in protecting against crime [illegible]

ADOPT NEW POLICY.

The State Board of Charities a few years ago changed its policy of handling the homeless child. The old policy was to place that child in an institution and care for it. Now the homeless child is only sent to the institution as a receiving station. It is then placed out in a normal home in the country. The old policy of caring for the "nobody's child" has been abandoned in the following institutions:

Boston Children's Aid Society, Boston Children's Friend Society, Boston Children's Mission, Church Home for Orphaned and Destitute Children, Haverhill Children's Aid Society, New Bedford Children's Aid Society, Marcella Street Home, [illegible] Asylum for [illegible] Children, [illegible] Boston Society [illegible] Wanderers, and others [illegible] for [illegible] Girls [illegible] Home, [illegible] New England Home for [illegible]

Lawyer [illegible] Acton, who has with others been studying the homeless child problem, says:

"This system of putting the normal child in a normal home has shown its wisdom. If Mr. Conrad will look over 'After Careers of Minor Wards,' published by the Massachusetts State Board of Charity, he will see for himself how effectively this plan has worked.

BERT—No, suh! Ah's a plasterer down on de eight hundred an' sixty eight flo', Ah is LEON—Are you the guy who balled up the signals down there? What are your signals?

BERT We got private signals. Two up, three down an' one ter stop

LEON—Yer wrong? It's one up, two down and three to stop Now if you like yer life, blow one and haul me in off this swingin' girder

Quit whistle blows, Bert drops rope, and Leon swings on beam in mid-aid.)

BERT (eating lunch)—Yas, an Ah ain't anxious to [illegible]

LEON—Don't you want me to come in there? Can't I eat, too?

BERT—Oh, suah. Is dat all you wants? Ah didn't know you et. (Pulls Leon in to stationary beam.)

LEON—I don't know whether to let you stay up here or throw you [illegible]

BERT—Man, you throw me off heah, an' de mawnin' papers will read "Double Suicide," dass all

LEON—Aw, whassamatter? You afraid to sit up here? Why

BERT Listen to me, mista—Ah may be dark, but Ah ain't no blackbird

LEON Why, yer as safe up here is in a baby's cradle

BERT Yes, a [illegible] baby

LEON Why w[illegible] There's not a bit o' danger

LEON—Only seventy

BERT—Well man, when you're buildin' them sebbenty stories, bleeb me, Ah'se gonna be down below, a-lookin' up. No mo'.

LEON—Of course, we gotta have some accidents. We can't prevent killing a few hundred or so.

BERT—True—true.

Seldum Seezit Finds a River

Copyright, 1914, by the Star Company. Great Britain Rights Reserved.

Our World-Famous Detective Emerges from Long Retirement and Plunges Into South America to Trail Roosevelt's River to Its Liar—Pardon, We Mean Lair.

CHAPTER I.

A MESSENGER boy did the one-step hesitation into the home of Seldum Seezit, the world-famous detective

He handed him a message.

Did our hero tear it open?

He did not. Other detectives do, but not our own incomparable Seldum

"Perhaps," he muttered, "if I read it I will find out what it is about" Elementary, dear reader, elementary

The message was:

London, England—Come and see me at once
SIR SAVAGE LANGUID."

I suspect this is a cablegram," said Seldum

CHAPTER II.

"OLD TOP, I want you to prove that Roosevelt didn't discover a new river," stated Sir Savage Languid.

"As near as I can understand it, this wasn't a new river. It had been running for some time"——

"I hired you for a detective, not as a joke," snapped Sir Savage Languid

"Well, that's what most detectives are," replied our hero.

"There's a million pounds in it"——

"The river?"

"No, in the job. Do you get me?"

"Not unless I get the million first," said Seldum.

Sir Savage Languid wrote the check and gave it to the great detective

"I don't believe Roosevelt discovered a river, and I am convinced the water runs up hill in it. Furthermore, I know it was some other river. I want to prove this."

"Certainly, it's a cinch to prove there ain't no river and the water runs up a hill in it!"

"Then go. Remember, you are to prove there's no such river."

CHAPTER III.

"HARK!"

Seldum Seezit spoke to his faithful chauffeur

"Can you not hear the matin song of the spider monkeys bounding from limb to limb of the rubber trees?"

The chauffeur merely wept. He hadn't run over a human being for eight weeks. This was because he had not seen a pedestrian for fifty-six days

"We are in South America!" exclaimed our hero.

"What time is it?" asked the chauffeur, yawning.

"It is two and a quarter minutes past the twelfth parallel of latitude!" he exclaimed. "The river ought to be running around in this vicinity

CHAPTER IV.

SELDUM SEEZIT motored up in front of a large estate

"Can you tell me," he asked of the man who was leaning over the front gate, "whose river this is?" and he pointed to a great stream

"It is my river," replied the gentleman. "I raised it from a little puddle."

The great detective hurried on. He was discouraged but not baffled.

CHAPTER V.

EIGHT more weeks have passed

Seldum Seezit is back in London

"Ha!" you exclaim, "the great detective has been baffled at last; he has failed"——

But wait.

Perhaps we can think up some way out of this mess as we write. . . .

"Well, well, my good man, tell me about it," exclaimed Sir Savage Languid, eagerly, as Seldum Seezit called on him

"I found the river all right. There's no doubt that Roosevelt discovered it," answered the detective.

CHAPTER VI.

"I DO not believe you. You are a faker. Your ideas all run up hill. Besides, I have said Roosevelt didn't discover any river; he happened on an old second hand river!"

Sir Savage Languid was certainly angry.

"Prove it—prove it, and then swear secrecy, and I'll give you another million, he hissed

CHAPTER VII.

SLOWLY Seldum Seezit took a package from inside his high hat

Slowly he unwound it and disclosed a small typewriter

"Look," he said, haughtily.

Sir Savage Languid turned his head.

"I have no interest in that junk, I"—— but he did not finish

"Look at that there typewriter, you pig-headed old dear!" yelled Seldum Seezit. "See this—all the letters with one exception are in perfect condition That one letter has been worn entirly away I found this typwriter on the shores of the river. The character that has been worn entirely away is the letter 'I.'"

Sir Savage Languid groaned and dropped his head upon his arms His frame shook with emotion

"That settles it, Roosevelt did find the river What shall I do now?

"You might jump out of the window or mix a drink I strongly advise the latter," laughed Seezit, angrily, "but why worry?

"Worry, how can I help it?"

CHAPTER VIII.

"OH, I don't know as I would worry," advised Seldum Seezit, the world famous detective, looking Sir Savage Languid the English explorer, plumb in the monach

"It is an Englishman's privilege to worry in his own house, besides, that river, the proof, the'

"It is cruel of me to keep you in suspense," bellowed Seldum Seezit gently "Sir Savage, old top, do not worry no one can prove Roosevelt discovered that river"

"And why not?"

"That river had a folding bed I drank up all the water, folded up

Potash and Perlmutter--

A Funny Scene from Montague Glass' International Success "Potash and Perlmutter," Published by Permission of Mr. Glass and A. H. Woods.

MORE than one seasoned dramatist declined the seemingly hopeless task of whipping into dramatic form the material contained in Mr. Montague Glass' episodical sketches. Yet there they are, on the stage of the Cohan Theatre, Abe and Mawruss, with their "stickers" and "sellers," their models and buyers and designers—and their own unique brand of splintered language, dynamited from the more stable forms found in the dictionary. Through the befriending of an employe the firm nearly comes upon the rocks. Boris Andrieff, whom Potash has taken in off the streets, is a fine "musiker," but a poor bookkeeper. He is a cultured young man, a musician and a refugee from Russia, where he is accused of complicity in some bomb-throwing student riots, and when finally he is arrested by emissaries of the Czar's government, for extradition, the warm hearted partners hock their cloak and suit business to go his bail. Potash now learns that Andrieff has won the heart of his only daughter, Irma; and when it seems that the chances are good that the young student will be sent back to Russia, and to Siberia, he tells him to clear out to Canada. Potash relies on a technicality to evade the forfeiting of the twenty thousand dollar bail which he and Perlmutter have put up—and which represents the sole capital of their business.

We get an amusing insight into the ways of Abe and Mawruss as we watch them at their office. Potash is the first to arrive, and he tackles the morning's mail.

POTASH—Mr. Perlmutter [illegible]

MISS COHEN—No.

POTASH—Not yet? (Opens letters.) Weekly statement from our traveling salesman Mannie Immerglick. Twenty-two dollars [illegible] sleeping cars. Twenty two dollars for sleeping cars, and he was recommended as a wide-awake salesman. No wonder he can't sell goods, he sleeps all the time. Thank heaven, we're getting rid of him. Andrieff, charge this to Mannie Immerglick.

BORIS—Yes, sir.

POTASH (reading letter)—"Messrs. Potash and Perlmutter. Dear Sir: Your goods received, also your letter in which you say you must have [illegible]. I wish to state that if a check, I can give you right away; if money, you will have to wait. I also noticed where you stated in your letter that you [illegible] second bill of goods until I pay for the first one. I am very sorry to say I can't wait that long [illegible]. With best regards to you and your wife Rosie [illegible] typewriter, Miss Cohen.

POTASH—Answer this letter. "Messrs. Blocktinn and [illegible]. Your letter received and in reply must [illegible] about the check. We would rather wait for [illegible] selling our goods, regards to you [illegible] (Miss Cohen turns away.) [illegible] love correspondence at home.

MISS COHEN—Yes, sir. Oh, Mr. Potash, goods [illegible]

POTASH—Where from?

MISS COHAN—From Klinger and Feinholz.

POTASH—Klinger and Feinholz. What's the matter with them again?

MISS COHEN—I don't know, sir. Here's their letter [illegible]

POTASH (takes letter and reads it)—"Gents: We return herewith the Rockaway Sackerine; as we are running a [illegible] Museum, and do not want any [illegible] Furthermore, the Rockaway [illegible] the Arverne Sack as [illegible] diamonds, and oblige." (Gets angry.) Always the Arverne Sack, they keep throwing it in my face. My, my, what a fortune in that sack.

(Enter Perlmutter.)

PERLMUTTER—Good morning.

POTASH—Oh, say, Mawruss——

PERLMUTTER—It's trouble, I can see it in your face.

POTASH (picks up letter)—Look! The third bill of goods returned this week. Nothing should be good enough for Klinger and Feinholz but the Arverne Sack. Well, the Arverne Sack don't belong to us, and we can't [illegible] it to 'em. I told you the Rockaway Sackerines wa[illegible] [illegible] fake a sack design—call it by any other name [illegible] just as rotten. If it ain't the goods people want, ain't [illegible]

PERLMUTTER—Miss Cohen.

MISS COHEN—Yes, sir.

PERLMUTTER—Take down a letter. "Mr. Max [illegible], Designer for Potash and Perlmutter. Dear Sir: Your contract with us expires next week, and you can expire with it."

POTASH—Expire, what do you mean, expire? [illegible] don't you speak English?

PERLMUTTER—Expire, goes on.

POTASH—You mean we discharge him?

PERLMUTTER—No, we are firing him.

POTASH—Well, why not say so?

PERLMUTTER—I do say so: "You quit Saturday night as your services give me a great satisfaction [illegible]."

POTASH (continuing)—"And furthermore and yet besides, Mr. Pinkel, you couldn't design paper bags for a delicatessen store."

PERLMUTTER (continues to dictate)—"And another thing, you call yourself a cutter; you couldn't cut your own [illegible]. Please take this notice as final."

POTASH—"And also take notice that you are a humbug and a cheat and your Sackerine is good for nix. Yours truly, Potash."

PERLMUTTER—"and Perlmutter."

POTASH—Well, we got to get a new designer.

PERLMUTTER (taking up letter)—Yes, and we got to keep him, Abe. A designer, you know, won't stand abuse like a partner. (Reads letter.) Ah! "Can let you have that ottermobile for $650, including the license. Yours truly, [illegible]." That's fine.

POTASH—Ottermobile. What do we want with an ottermobile? Business don't look so good.

PERLMUTTER—Well, an ottermobile makes it look [illegible], don't it? It's a big bargain, Abe, only $650 for a Cadillac.

POTASH—Well, is it a good one?

PERLMUTTER—Good one? He has had it for eight years, and he guarantees it a first-class two-cylinder machine.

POTASH—Only two cylinders?

PERLMUTTER—Two's enough to begin with, ain't it? When I get to be a fine driver then I get a few more. Oh, [illegible], Miss Cohen! The buyer from Moe Gan's store in Duluth is coming to see our goods at 11 o'clock sharp. Tell the models, Miss Levin, Miss Potchly and——

POTASH—And Miss Silverman.

PERLMUTTER—Why Miss Silverman?

POTASH—Miss Silverman is a sister to my wife's cousin.

PERLMUTTER—Relations, always relations.

POTASH—And why not?

PERLMUTTER—You know what I think about wife's relations; when they got a little money they treat you like a dog—if they're broke your wife gives them all your cigars and ties, and if you happen to have the same size neck—Abe—then always all your life you are buying collars and shirts for two. No, Abe, I got no confidence in wife's relations. My motto is—wife's relations H. M. T.

POTASH—H. M. T.? What is that?

PERLMUTTER—H. M. T.? "Hell mit 'em." (To Miss Cohen.) Three styles. Hurry, Miss Cohen.

MISS COHEN—But Miss Levin is not here yet.

(Enter Miss Levin.)

MISS LEVIN—Yes, I am. I've just got in.

PERLMUTTER—What do you think we are running, anyhow, Miss Levin, a bank? Half past ten she gets down and all she says is she just got in.

MISS COHEN—It's my fault, Mr. Perlmutter. I should have told you. She telephoned her grandmother was sick.

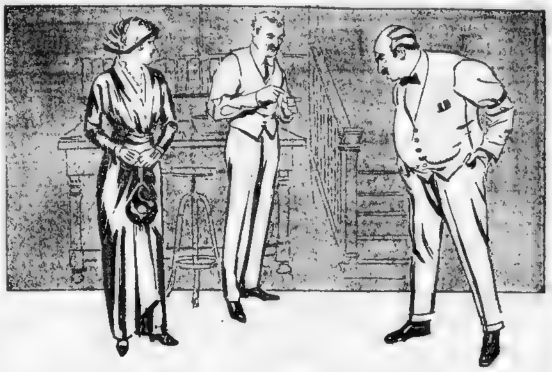
PERLMUTTER—Telephoned? Excuse me, but what good is the telephone, Miss Levin? If a customer wants to see how a garment looks on you could he put his eye to the telephone, Miss Levin? No, Miss Levin, a cloak model couldn't do business by telephone.

The partners are not happy if they are not bickering. In their hearts they love and respect each other—but they delight in arguing. And so Andrieff becomes a bone of contention. He is Abe's find, and that is enough for Mawruss.

PERLMUTTER (looks at Andrieff angrily)—Say, how long we going to keep that fellow?

POTASH—Why, what's the matter? He's all right.

PERLMUTTER—He's all right, eh? Didn't he send it last week a bill to Pe[illegible]stein, Gimmel and Company for [illegible] dollars when should it have been eight hundred. Bah! He understands music and opera better than he understands bookkeeping.



PERLMUTTER—Abe, if I should say it what was in my mind, I could be arrested.
POTASH—Then, for heaven's sake say it and be done with it.

POTASH—Well, can he help it that he loves it music, all the operas he knows it from Travatory backwards—to Palliatski. The boy is simply musical.

PERLMUTTER—What is it here, a music store or a cloak and suit house? Maybe you want him to write operas in our books? And his character—with no references he comes—from off the streets you take a man, to make out our checks and handle our cash?

POTASH—Say, Mawruss, a student with an education from St. Petersburg College is no thief, Mawruss; he knows it languages—German and French and English. English he speaks as perfect as you or me—even perfecter—and should let him starve? Now you got me mad—the only use some people got for a partner is they could always blame him for everything that goes wrong—and take credit for everything that goes right. Partners—bah!

PERLMUTTER—By golly, the man that invented partners had a grudge against the human race. (Boris, who has heard the conversation referring to him, comes forward; his manner is very polite and dignified.)

BORIS—I beg your pardon, Mr. Potash, Mr. Perlmutter, it was impossible for me not to overhear. I—if it won't cause you any inconvenience I'll leave at the end of the week.

PERLMUTTER—Suits me!

POTASH—Leave! Why?

BORIS—In regard to my being without references, I left Russia in extreme haste, all my papers and baggage were taken from me. Since I have landed here you have been my only friends, really I could not think of coming between you.

POTASH—Mawruss!

PERLMUTTER—What is it?

POTASH—We owe to this gentleman an apology.

BORIS—No, really I——

PERLMUTTER—So!

POTASH—Yes, so! We have insulted him.

BORIS—Really, you misunderstand.

POTASH—I say, Mawruss, do you think I shall sit here day after day looking into your face after you have done this?

PERLMUTTER—Have your desk turned around.

BORIS—Saturday night, then, sir—— (Returns to desk.)

POTASH—Say, Mawruss, if I didn't know it that deep down in your heart you are not a cold blooded villain—only a pig head obstinate—I would tear it up my partnership papers and throw 'em in your face. Bah! (He goes into the workroom.)

PERLMUTTER (calling after him)—Tear 'em—it's all right, tear 'em! He'll tear up the papers and throw them in my face. I don't take no bluffs, you know. Mr. Andrieff!

BORIS—Yes, sir.

PERLMUTTER—You know, that fellow Abe Potash is a fine fellow, but he can't take it a joke; by golly, he ain't got an ounce of humor in his whole body. Have a cigar.

BORIS—No, thanks, I——

PERLMUTTER—I suppose you save the coupons. How much are you getting in wages now?

BORIS—Twelve dollars a week, sir.

PERLMUTTER—From Saturday night you get fifteen.

BORIS—But, Mr. Perlmutter, I don't think——

PERLMUTTER—Pay no attention to Potash. If he makes a kick about my raising your wages I fix it. It's all right, eh?

BORIS—Yes, sir. I'm very glad to stay on. I have so few friends. I have been here only a few months. Indeed I am very grateful.

A new designer is needed and Feldman, the lawyer, produces the beautiful and intelligent Miss Goldman. The partners foregather, but make a poor impression on the designer.

POTASH—Are you a lady—I mean, are you the lady who was the designer for Mendal and Gleckstein?

MISS GOLDEN—I am.

PERLMUTTER—You! The Arverne Sack is from you?

MISS GOLDMAN—A mere trifle!

POTASH—A trifle! I bet Mendal and Gleckstein cleaned up over a hundred thousand dollars in money.

PERLMUTTER—More yet! What are you talking about?

MISS GOLDMAN—Very likely, but that's all ancient history. Mr. Feldman said you wanted to see me. May I sit down?

(Perlmutter rushes up with one chair; Potash throws Miss Cohen out of her chair and pushes it forward, while Feldman jumps to a third chair in which Miss Goldman sits.)

MISS GOLDMAN—One will be enough, thanks. Now what's the offer?

POTASH—Miss Goldman, you know the firm of Potash and Perlmutter are second to only none in the cloak and suit business—and the advantages that a designer would have in being an association with us are too numerous to mention. (Looks proudly at Perlmutter, who is impatient at Potash's long speech.)

MISS GOLDMAN—Then suppose we don't mention them.

POTASH—But I want to explain to you——

PERLMUTTER—Abe, will you allow me to make a suggestion?

POTASH—Go ahead.

PERLMUTTER—Thanks, Abe. My suggestion is that I do the talking.

POTASH—Then I am to be a silent partner.

PERLMUTTER—Yes, that is if you can. (To Miss Goldman)—Now, Miss Goldman, what do you want for your services?

MISS GOLDMAN (rising)—I don't think the position will suit me, Mr. Feldman.

POTASH—Is that so? Well, remember—there's just such as good fish in the sea as ever jumped it off from the hook.

PERLMUTTER—Abe, if I should say it what was in my mind, I could be arrested.

POTASH—Then, for heaven's sake say it and be done with it.

A PARTY of tourists went to visit a famous chateau on the Loire. On entering one of the rooms, the guide remarked: "This, ladies and gentlemen, is the hall in which the Duke of Guise was assassinated."

"Pardon me," interrupted one of the tourists, "when I came here three years ago you told me it was in a room in the other wing."

Thereupon the cicerone replied, with perfect serenity:

"Yes, but the chateau was then undergoing repairs."

PAUL KER, one of the bright stars of "The Midnight Girl," was invited by an acquaintance to a cafe after a matinee recently. Seated around the table were several mutual friend, and the time was merrily spent until Mr. Ker was due to return to the theatre for the evening performance. The acquaintance managed to escape paying any of the numerous [illegible] checks that were presented, and Mr. Ker determined before the party broke up that the tightwad should be forced to unloosen.

The waiter was accordingly instructed to place the next check before him. This was done, and, finding no e[illegible], the man reluctantly paid, and immediately left the cafe. As the door was opened an automobile tire blew out with a loud explosion.

"Great heavens!" Mr. Ker exclaimed in fear, "he has shot himself."

WHITFORD KANE, who is quite as successful a producer as he is an actor, is not a realist. That is, he believes in suggestion.

"It isn't always necessary to know that the man is dead," he declares. "The point may be better illustrated by the observation that if a mother takes her children out to walk the impression is normal that she is married, whether she has the father of the children with her or not."

LILLIAN KELLER, while playing with "Peg o' My Heart," registered at a hotel in Chicago.

"What name, please?" the clerk inquired.

"Don't you see what I have written on the register?"

"Yes," he replied, "that is what roused my curiosity."

EDWARD FIELDING, who [illegible] season with Madame Nazimova [illegible] cled the United States on his present tour, and is full of his experiences. One day, in the cafe of a hotel in Waco he asked a waitress if they served a table d'hote meal. After scanning the menu card for a few minutes she excused herself and went into the kitchen and returned with the information that the only meal they served was oatmeal.

Another time, in Maine, at an American plan hotel, he went into the dining room too late for breakfast. Not wishing to inconvenience the serving maids or cooks, he asked for toast and tea. The waitress shouted the order through the butler's window into the kitchen. A moment later the cook's head appeared at the window and she inquired:

"Who's sick?"

"THE modern dance will never be routed by orators," said Dorothy Bentley, the pretty dancer, the other day. "It has gained too much headway. I can recall only one method to stop it," she continued with a smile, "and that is illegal. It was practised by an old negro in Richmond, who carved up another [illegible] tangoed with his wife. The judge, in sentencing the culprit, observed that it was not illegal for a man and a woman to dance.

"I knows dat, judge," replied the darky, "but I done told dat wife [illegible] she danced I wanted to see some daylight between 'em."

Wife

THE guests at the table were discussing diets.

"I lived on eggs and milk for two months," remarked one lady, "and gained ten pounds."

"And I," said a gentleman, "lived for over a year on nothing but milk, and gained in weight every day."

"Mercy!" came the chorus. "How did you manage to do it?"

The gentleman [illegible] "I cannot say that I remember, [illegible] but I presume my method was similar to [illegible] baby."

"If there were any gentlemen in the car," she said, "they would not allow a lady to stand!"

"Don't be cross, ma'am," he said. "I'll make one toward it."

THE [illegible] teacher asked a 1B class what "pauses" were. After considerable thought one little chap volunteered the information that "They're what grows on pussy cats."

In a 4B test, Romeo and Juliet were mentioned among the famous explorers.

And it was some wise boy who wrote on his test paper, "Chickens are birds harmful to men."

IS THIS YOUR BIRTHDAY?

EDITOR Just for Fun Column—Sir: Is there some book that will tell the fortune of everyone by means of the date of his birth? Inclosed is date of my birth. G. P.

G. P.—Any book that will tell fortunes in this manner is "some book." But why seek a book? Know that, by means of astrology, the stars and other things that a baby born on this date will cry if a safety pin gets wide open and penetrates him. Babies are also born quite young during this month. If it is a girl baby she will grow up to be fond of clothes. If a boy is born on this date he will be anxious to marry—until after marriage.

The Clam Digger's Bride

A Ballad of the Long Island Shore.

By WEX JONES.

HI SMITH was born right in Patchogue,
But never cut much figger,
For folks looked kinder down upon
The profession of clam digger.

It ain't no cinch is diggin' clams,
In damp and mud and weather,
And though Hi worked like any hoss
He could get no roll together.

But Cupid laughs at bankrolls, so
Hi worshipped Mandy Dickens,
Whose father ran a poultry farm
With near a thousand chickens.

You couldn't blame Amanda's pa
For trying hard to spoil her,
For out of all these thousand squabs
She was the swellest broiler.

Now Hiram brought a mess of clams,
A gift to Mandy's father;
And did the old man, hating Hi,
Accept the clams?—well, rather!

For no matter who the digger is,
Fresh clams is tasty critters,
Whether you goes 'em in the nude
Or neatly wrapped in fritters.

But when old Dickens bit a clam
There came an awful ruction;
His best store teeth had met upon
Some adamant obstruction.

Yet, strange to say, when he observed
The object that he'd bitten,
He smiled the happy smile you see
Upon a cream-filled kitten.

And when in every other clam
He saw some object glisten
He hastened after Hiram Smith,
A-shouting, "Hi there, listen:

"Say where you dig those clams, and take Your pick of all my chickens."
"You're on," said Hi, "give me the one That's named Amanda Dickens!"

Patchogue ne'er saw a finer pair—
The groom was strong, the bride was pretty
But when the knot was tied, her pa
Went scooting to the city.

He smiled on entering Maiden Lane,
But luck was never crueller;
"Them ain't no pearls; them's beads, my friend,"
Grimly pronounced the jeweler.

"They can't be," Dickens loudly shrieked,
"I found 'em all in clam shells."
"They're beads," the peevish expert yelled,
"In any kind of sham shells."

The old man stamped and tore his hair
And downed a glass of licker—
"Thought I was slick," he sadly said,
"But that there Hiram's slicker."

"The boy that puts it over me
Is surely a jim-dandy;
I'll have to turn my poultry farm
Over to him and Mandy.

* * * * * *

Today 10,000 Plymouth Rocks
For Hiram lay and cackle;
Which shows how brains will always win
At anything they tackle;

And teaches us we should not sneer
At any humble figger,
For Hiram Smith, the Poultry King,
Was once a poor clam digger!

Mutterzolb & Son

"MILTON," shouted Mutterzolb, "get me right away the address of the headquarters of the car street conductors. I want to make a compleine on a conductor for highwaii robbery. He threw a transfer of mine in the street, saying it wuz from yesterday when I only got it from Abe Goolman's errand boy this morning."

"Of course," said Milton, concealing a smile, "he had no right to do a thing like that, but if you report him for it and he loses his job, you'd probably be sorry for it afterward."

"Well," reflected Mutterzolb, "I wouldn't want to see him lose his job on account of it, so I wouldn't report him, but as a warning to him not to try and rob respectable taxpayers any more, I'll just go down to the car company and tell them in a very nice way what he done. And what you think, in all my excitements I forgot to take his number, so you go right down and watch the cars for him. You'll be able to tell easy enough who he is because he talks kind of fresh.

"By rights, you know, I ought to sue them if I had witnesses, but just my luck, the only ones who saw it happen wuz two other conductors. And, say, I think you're making a big mistake when you tell me I shouldn't report this feller. I got an idea that he's a genuine crook and is working in together mit pickpockets, because he told everybody to move up to the front of the car, and when they did a feller in front had his watch and chain stolen.

"I tell you, Milton, you got to look mit suspicion on them conductors, and as far as I can remember I always did look suspicious. Of course, I wouldn't say that all conductors are that way, because there's Jim Hanley, the conductor who used to be my shipping clerk. Look at the fine character he's got. That boy would never accept a fare from me and I got to like that feller so much that if I missed his car it would aggravate me so that I couldn't ride at all; and even during the whole distance that I was walking home I would feel it.

"Another good feller is that Yasher Looyis, who buys his entire line from me. I took him yesterday to Cooney Ireland for a good time because he's a gentleman, and he wouldn't let me spend a cent even. Every time I would give him a treat and I went to my shoe to get the money to pay for it, he had it paid already. When we wuz going home I told him that I didn't like him to do them things when he's my guest.

"But did we have a time, Milton! Never did I enjoy myself so much. I found an envelope mit forty-two subway tickets, and besides in the amusements I found a littel enjoyment, too.

"First, we went to Looney Park, and so soon we got in there a feller mit a Turkish candy pedler's hat says to me that he could tell me my name, although he don't know me and never saw me before, all for a quarter. So I thought to myself what's the great bargain in that? Even if he would already tell me my name it wouldn't be worth it.

"Then Yasher wanted to treat me mit a ride on the camel's back, but I wuz afraid I would fall, and, say, who could I hold responsible for it if I did? The boss from the camels looked as though he's lucky he's got enough to eat.

"Then we got hungry and I wuz just going over to buy a frankfurter when I heard a boy asking the man for a dog, and he gave him one of them things that I thought wuz frankfurters. I don't see how the law allows them to sell dog meat. Well, what could you expect when I saw a policeman himself eating one?

"Then we took a walk over to the dancing hall, and who do you think we saw there but Rosie Schwartz, who used to be my stenografter. Remember how she used to make me nearly crazy mit that dance talk about the Turkish Rot? Well, yesterday she got my head so full mit that dancing talk that if I had to pay her for her time while she wuz talking to me the same as I did when she wuz working for me, I would have today the biggest headache. Now she's already a regular professoress of dancing. Every dance she knows; all I could hear from her wuz the Tangle dance, the Texas Tammany, the Maxnix, the Bummy Hug and a lot more such crazy kind dances.

"Then she told me how thirsty she wuz from dancing around, so I treated her mit a drink which Yasher insisted on paying for, and you ought to see how Yasher right away fell in love mit her. You know Yasher is yet an old maid, so I thought maybe I'll be able to make here a good match because I like Yasher. He's got principle and is one of them fellers what don't expect you to do anything for him for nothing.

"And, say, she wuz always a very fine girl, too. Not like the other girls who, after working for you a while, get fresh right away and commence to holler they want a raise. Never did I heard that from her. During the whole six years she worked for me, and to this day even she would never left me if that crook Katzenstein didn't interfere in my business by giving her eight dollars a week more than I wuz. And when I wuz looking on her, I wuz only thinking what a fine wife she would make Yasher, and Yasher wuz just crazy about her. He wuz buying drinks one after the other, and took us all over the park on everything.

"He wuz feeling so good that he made me feel very good, too. He gave me right away a big order for next season, and he whispered in my ear I should fix it for him. I told him he don't need to worry about that, and that he should just leave it to me, and I had everything going along fine already, but what spoiled the whole thing wuz she wuz already married."

Woman's Dress

SAID Adam to Eve, "I don't give a fig * * * how often, old girl, you need a new rig * * * for dressmakers' bills have no terrors for me * * * when you want to fuss up, just go shake the tree."

Thus it was at the start of this gay, giddy life * * * that by Fashion's decree man saw much of his wife * * * and he never got blue 'round the neck or the gills * * * a-bawling out dressmakers or cussing their bills.

But it didn't take woman very long to wake up * * * a[illegible] flounce and feather to her loose-fig-leaf makeup * * * [illegible] Eve in that fashion elected to dress * * * Dame Fa[illegible] man on the guess.

Woman kept adding this and that to her clothes * * * until man could see but the end of her nose * * * and then she got wisdom in the back of her head * * * and stopped piling on and started to shed.

Along the back path where the centuries rolled * * * the trail of her cast-offs a tale could unfold * * * now her stockings she's shedding in her efforts to please * * * and the Fig once again will be king of the trees.

Then with Adam I'll sing, "I don't give a fig * * * how often, dear wife, you need a new rig * * * for dressmakers' bills have no terrors for me * * * when you want to fuss up, just go shake the tree."

Hashimura Togo and the "Weak-Enders"—A Letter from the Japanese Boy of-All-Work to the Editor of GOOD HOUSEKEEPING MAGAZINE.

Published by Permission of GOOD-HOUSEKEEPING MAGAZINE.

By Wallace Irwin.

To Editor Good Housekeeping Magazine, who know how to make home beautiful by staying there

DEAR MR: There are a vacant place to be obtained for bright Japanese Gen. House-worker at home of Mr. & Mrs. Jeremia Spiggott, Flag Wave, Pa. That vacancy are where I am not now working. It surprise me. This are how it happen.

During breakfast-table last Frysday Hon. Mr. Spiggot look uply from Pittsburg newsreading and say with voice, "Mrs. and Mr. Wm. H. Axweilder shall be here tomorrow p. m. for shell weak-end visitation."

"They are both entirly unwelcome, I am sure," she snob.

"It [illegible] merely asked people we liked there would [illegible] to hospitality," he rake off. "We must enjoy Hon. Axweilder's company because of his great wealth. If we are sifficiently delightful to him, maybe he will permit me to [illegible] in business. You will love his conversation talk. For so dull a man he have a most penetrating mind."

"[illegible] to bore me so deep," she [illegible]. "[illegible] wife less equally."

[illegible] enslave me for hard housework [illegible] be delightful for this disgusting visit. All day I do considerable proud bedmake with swollen quilts of mushy silk appearance. [illegible] tomorrow p. m. arrive when Hon. Mrs. approach up to me and say with [illegible]:

"Togo, [illegible] at toot of 2.22 train Mrs. & Mr. Axweilder will arrive in custody of Hon. Husband. Kindly to hitch down Sarah, the horse, to fashionable bug-wagon and elope to depot with [illegible] expression."

I go forth [illegible] garage where Hon. Sarah stood eating [illegible]. So I hitched it and made immediate race-course to depot where I stood proudly clutching harness with grand thumbs resemble Newport.

Toot-toot of 2.22! Three human personalities eloped forthly from Pullmanly train. One were Hon. Spiggott appearing full of courteous peev. Another was one enlarged gentleman of Republican expression. Another were a very stretched lady whose nose contained great snobbery amidst eyeglass.

"It are such pleasant change from our usual wealth to be trotting behind mild horseback instead of whizzing as usual in expensive ottomobiles," she snuggest sweetishly as we jogg [illegible].

"We prefer this style of locomobile because of its health," growell Hon. Spiggott. Yet he attempt to appear hospital.

At hallway home Hon. Mrs. Spiggot were awaiting with face containing smiles. By the cordial of her behavior you would think she was glad. "I am so hilarious to see you including your delicious husband!" she holla with soprano. Kissing enjoyed.

"We shall have such unaccustomed pleasure in these simple surroundings," notate Mrs. Axewellder.

Mrs. Spiggott replied by looking iced with her eye.

"I am glad you have came on such an amiable day for a golluf game!" deplore Hon. Spiggott, putting on sporty cap.

"[illegible] it are going to rain," say Hon. Ax with [illegible] bump voice.

"That [illegible] make it seem more Scottish," say Boss [illegible].

"On what [illegible] lot have you room to play golluf in such a [illegible]borhood?" require Hon. Ax while they depart off, looking dangerous with clubs.

"This evening," Mrs. Spiggott explain to Mrs. Axeweilder, "we are determined to give you dinner-party to include Mr. and Mrs. Washington Whack, very charmed people next door."

"Are they related to the Whacks of Tuxedo?" Mrs. Ax cut up.

"I are not acquainted with their geography," glub Mrs. Boss.

"Unless from Tuxedo they cannot live," describe other lady.

Mrs. Spiggott reply by thinking unpleasantly.

"Would you not enjoy slight driveway around neighborhood for observe country and fresh air?" she require at lastly, as soonly as her voice ceased freezing.

"I am always fascinated to see how the other one half lives," Mrs. Axweilder shoot up.

So I again hitch down Sarah, the horse, and forthly we trotted. While we mope past sweet gardens & landscapes that visitor continue gawsping: "Quaint! How comfort people can be for small salaries!"

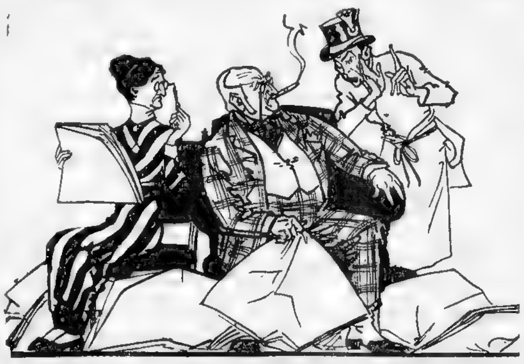
"Many persons surrounding here are top-high aristocrats!" snarrel Mrs. Spiggott.

"Undoubtlessly!" snuggest Mrs. Ax. "My Uncle Henry lives in country residence containing 800 rooms."

"What are names of it, Sing Sing?" collapse Mrs. Madam with sweetly smiling.

Mrs. Axweilder listen without hearing.

At lastly we arrive up to Cemetery View Country Club for slight tea drunk. I wait outside nursing Sarah, the horse, for considerable hour. At lastly both Mrs. Ladies approach outward with accompaniment of their husbands who smell quite highball. Both feminines look quite iced as we go homeward.



"I observe how you suffer. Therefore I help escape." This I say. "I should much admire to go," he encroach, "yet cannot because Hon. Spiggotts would feel sad to lose us." "Your sudden depart off would grive them even less," I tell.

At lastly was dinner-time. I ceased off being coachman and became waitress, as usual.

"We only attempt small, cozy dinners in our excluded set," explain Hon. Mrs. while 6 persons took set-down to dinner.

"My dining room contains 80 people, mostly nobility," report Mrs. Axweilder while eating soup.

When all foods was finished all retreated to parlor room where bridge-gamble was enjoyed till late night. At 1:62 o'clock Mrs. Axweilder call Mrs. Whack an Ace & Mrs. Whack reply peevly, "Renig!" full of scorns. All make go home agreeing how enjoyment that evening was.

At 2:11 clocktime, while those Axweilders was glad to go bed, Mrs. & Mr. Spiggott set alonesome in parlor room where I could hear.

"Why do you bring those buffalo kittens to rage around this neighborhood?" she ask it. "One day more and I shall poison their 'foods.'"

"They must get their fresh air somewhere," he reprieve.

"Why should they spoil ours?" she snagger.

"I admit it," he jar. "What could be more disgusting than Hon. Axweilder?"

"Hon. Mrs. Axweilder," say her. So they go bed thinking so.

Next morning were churchtime.

"We have engaged orchestra seats for you at church," repose Mrs. Madam.

"What denomino church is it?" require Hon. Axweilder.

"Methodist," say her.

"We never go Methodist," say him. "We are Osteopaths."

"Then you will be pleased to excuse us," backfire Hon. Mrs. with smiling glum. "We dare not neglect religion for those we love."

So Hon. Spiggotts depart for church, walking together like chorus girls. Hon. Axweilders remain in parlor room reading picture in comical supplement.

"Why you brought me to this disgustly place?" require she from him.

"I agree," he snatch back. "We should have more fun going to hospital."

When I hear this repartee I step forthly into room with helpmeet expression.

"Sweethearted Weak-Enders," I say so, "obtain your hats and baggages with immediate quickness and I will snuggle you away from here before they can catch you."

"What you mean by what you say?" they require.

"I observe how you suffer. Therefore I help escape." This I say.

"I should muchly admire to go," he croach, "yet cannot because Hon. Spiggotts would feel sad to lose us."

"Your sudden depart off would grieve them even less," I tell. "Last night they included you among buffaloes and mentioned poison while speaking of you."

"Oh! !" Both stand up on their stamping feet. They rosh upstairs for bag. They rosh downstairs with it. I go to animal garage for hitch down Sarah.

Pretty soonly church-bell chime forth while Mrs. & Mr. Spiggott return backward from there. They observe weak-end gasts on porch.

"What—must you carry yourselves away before Monday?" require Mrs. Spiggott for sorrow voice.

"Your poor but neat home is no place for zoological buffaloes!" stroggle Hon. Mrs. Ax.

"And poisonous food might be expensive from high price of drugs for economical persons," grubble Hon. Mrs. Ax.

"Who told you this & that?" narrate those Spiggotts shockly.

"Togo did!" say others.

"So thanks!" she say so for sweetness resembling flirtatious snakes. "Please continue your usefulnes, Togo, by removing my happy company in time to catch the timetable."

Soonly I arrive up to porch-step accompanied by Sarah, the horse. When those Weak Enders and other baggage were loaded in Hon. Mrs. Spiggott spoke furthermore.

"Togo," she pronounce, "when 1.11 train arrives up, hitch Sarah to the depot and continue traveling by rail with my dearie friends who can doubtlessly afford to hire you among their expensive servants."

So I spanked up Sarah with expression of one seeking employment where he is not needed.

Hoping you are the same,

Yours truly.

"THE BRIGHT SIDE."

"THERE is such a thing as overdoing this 'bright side' business," growled an old chap at a New York [illegible] the night. "I ought to know [illegible] is one of the sort that prides itself on [illegible] that [illegible] always looks on the bright side.

"[illegible] occasion I absent-mindedly placed the lighted end of a cigar in my mouth as I [illegible]. Of course I jumped up and caused a fearful racket for a time. [illegible] anxious to live up to her reputation of being [illegible] and cheerful and encouraging, smiled sweetly upon me and observed:

"'At least, dear, it was most fortunate that you discovered it immediately!'"

HE KNEW.

A WASHINGTONIAN, who was touring the Shenandoah Valley, stopped his motor car in the road one day and asked an aged darky who was painfully proceeding in the opposite direction whether he knew where Mr. Simpkins lived.

"Yessuh," was the reply. "He live heah in de valley."

"Do you know where his house is?"

The aged negro chuckled. "Deed I do, boss," he said. "I only wisht I had as many dollahs as I knows where dat house is."

LINE WAS BUSY, WOMAN WASN'T.

A YOUNG lady took down the receiver of the telephone one day and discovered that the line was busy.

"I just put on a pan of beans for dinner," she heard one woman complacently informing another.

She hung up the receiver and waited for the conversation to end. Upon returning to the telephone she found the woman still talking. Three times she waited, and then, at last, becoming exasperated, she broke into the conversation.

"Madam, I smell your beans burning," she announced, crisply.

A horrified scream greeted the remark, and the young lady was able to put in her call.

HOW HE COULD TELL.

A GEORGIA "cracker" tells this story on his own people: He says a Northern man who had settled in Georgia was visited by a friend who asked him how he liked the place and the people.

"Oh, all right," replied the man.

"Now tell me," asked the friend, "what is a 'Georgia cracker?' How can you tell him from another person?"

"Well," replied the Northern settler, "you see out in that field a black object?"

"[illegible]," said the friend.

"Well," said the man, "that may be either a 'Georgia cracker' or a stump. Watch it for half an hour, and if it moves, why, it's a stump."

CAUSE FOR SUSPICION.

LEM did not own a pair of stockings, so when the night before Christmas arrived he hung his trousers in the chimney of the old, tumbled-down shack that he called his home.

The following morning, a woman from the North, who was visiting in the village, called at the cabin with some presents for the family. She was greeted by Lem's smiling face, which protruded from a narrow opening in the door.

Wishing him a Merry Christmas, the woman asked him what he had received for gifts.

"Well, Ah guess Ah got er nigger," said Lem, earnestly. "Mah pants is gone."

Oh! Be Joyful

No Wonder.

A CERTAIN type of story—that having the sudden conclusion such as, "Willie Jones fired a gun yesterday; the funeral will be tomorrow"—has been claimed as purely American in its origin. But as a matter of fact this kind of story is older than America itself. If you will turn to II Chronicles xvi, 12, 13, you will find these words:

"And Asa in the thirty and ninth year of his reign was diseased in his feet, until his disease was exceeding great; yet in his disease he sought not to the Lord, but to the physicians. And Asa slept with his fathers . . ."

Fast Worker.

SHORTLY after the return of the fleet two naval officers were talking about their wives. Naturally they used nautical terms.

"What a dear little craft your wife is!" said the first.

"'Dear and little,' did you say? She is dear all right, but there's nothing little about her. Why, she is the biggest revenue cutter I have ever seen."

The Cure.

"EVERY time I see grandfather's sword I want to go to war."

"Well?"

"But every time I notice grandfather's wooden leg I cool down."

REVIEW OF REAL ESTATE MARKET OF PAST WEEK

Big Back Bay and Brighton Deals and Increased Suburban Activity Feature Week.

MANY SALES IN SOUTH END

A large deal in which a Back Bay apartment house and a tract of land in Brighton figured, numerous sales of [illegible] property [illegible] suburbs, [illegible] revival of interest in Boston [illegible] property featured the week [illegible] real estate market.

[illegible] Thursday 141 transfers—an unusual number—went to record in Suffolk County.

While the week's business suffers by comparison with the previous week, for the season of the year, and in the face of the hot spell, it is regarded as a favorable showing.

One of the effects of the hot spell was the scramble for Summer places along the seashore and inland. A considerable number of properties were either leased or purchased outright during the course of the week.

LARGE BACK BAY DEAL.

In the demand for suburban property West Roxbury showed up favorably. A number of properties in this section changed hands, including several lots on which homes will be constructed. In comparison with suburban trading, developments affecting property in the downtown section were few and far between.

The striking development of the week was the three-handed trade in which the Hotel Austerfield, situated at the northwest corner of Beacon street and Massachusetts avenue, and a tract of land on Commonwealth avenue, Brighton, containing [illegible] feet, figured.

Hotel Austerfield was sold by former Governor John D. Long to William P. Natale, who transferred to Gordon Dexter. This property is assessed for $195,000, of which $91,300 is on the 8,751 square feet of land.

The land, which is on the north side of Commonwealth avenue, and adjoins the Packard automobile station, was sold by Dexter to Natale. It is assessed for $11,200.

Hooper Estate in Dedham on Market

Two Hundred Acres Cut Into House Lots by John Hinston.

John Hinston, a well-known land developer [illegible] the old South Building, reports he is placing on the market the Robert C. Hooper estate in Dedham. This consists of nearly 200 acres and has a frontage of about [illegible] street. It adjoins the Neponset River reservation.

There are now several houses on the place. Mr Hinston has plans drawn for twelve more, ranging from five to seven rooms each, with from one-half to four acres of land. The property is near the great N. Y., N. H. & H. Railroad shops and locomotive works, the Sturtevant Blower Works and other large manufacturers.

The property is assessed for $68,000 and was [illegible] for cash. Mr Hinston is placing this on the market under the name of Readville Manor.

Cut Old Hawkins Estate into Lots

Somerville Property Placed on Market by McNamara & Coughlin.

The old Hawkins property, fronting on Washington street, near Union square, Somerville, at one time the site of the old Somerville Y. M. C. A. athletic grounds, has been divided into house lots and placed on the market by McNamara & Coughlin of [illegible].

The property adjoins the Lincoln park [illegible] has been cut into eighty [illegible] lots. It contains seven acres. Four streets, Parkdale, Renfrew, [illegible] and Mystic, have been cut through the property. Sewers, water and gas pipes will be laid.

The lots average about 3,000 feet each and range in price from $350 to $[illegible]. The property is known as Parkside. It is the last of a tract of sixty acres purchased by the Hawkins family from the Indians.

Complete Six-Story So. Boston Factory

The new six-story and basement plant of the American Ammonia Company, on Second street, South Boston, which was recently completed, is now in full possession of the company. The structure is fireproof throughout and will be devoted to the manufacture of White Foam ammonia.

The new factory is equipped with all the latest machinery and devices. Tracks of the New Haven run right into the building, which is equipped with chutes and the most modern loading facilities.

Tear Down Houses for State House Wing

With excavation work well under way near the corner of Beacon and Bowdoin streets, wreckers will commence to tear down tomorrow the four-story brick building on Mt Vernon street to make way for the new $900,000 State House wing. The occupants of the structures have all moved out. The foundation work will take about three months.

President Martin of Exchange Sees Nice Things in Store for Cape Cod Realty.

Reports of a probable realty boom in Cape Cod, to follow the completion of the Cape Cod Canal, are brought back by Boston brokers who visited the canal with the delegation from the Massachusetts Real Estate Exchange.

President John J. Martin of the exchange is among the enthusiasts who predict good things in the way of the development of the Cape and the increase of property values, to result from the canal.

Mr Martin declares that the opening of the canal will be followed by an influx of industries and of Summer visitors to the Cape which will do much to boom that section of the Commonwealth.

According to the announcement made by Commodore J. W. Miller, vice-president of the Cape Cod Canal Construction Company and director of the work, made to the visiting real estate men, the canal will probably be opened for traffic on July 29.

That the central location of the region about the canal and its easy accessibility to New York and Boston will draw manufacturers to it is believed by President Martin. His statement follows:

WILL RAISE VALUES.

"While it is still a trifle early to make predictions about the effect that the Cape Cod Canal will have on real estate in this region, my inspection of the canal has led me to believe that a boom of property along the canal will result.

"The region about the canal has two important advantages which are sure to attract manufacturers to it. In the first place the canal will be centrally located between Boston and New York. It will be easily accessible. It will be in direct communication with such large cities as Fall River, New Bedford and other cities along the Long Island Sound.

"[illegible] goods can be readily and cheaply delivered to manufacturers near the canal, who can in turn easily and at low cost distribute their manufactured product to Boston and New York and the various cities along the sound.

"The second advantage which the section holds out to manufacturers is the cheapness of land. In few sections, which afford transportation facilities equal to those of the canal upon its completion, is there so much vacant land, and at so low a cost.

WILL STIMULATE MARKET.

"As soon as manufacturers realize these advantages the industrial development of this section is sure to follow. More industries will result in the development of clusters of settlements about them.

All this will create a demand for land, which is sure to stimulate the present stagnant state of the local market.

"Another factor which is sure to favorably affect the development of the Cape is the additional influx of Summer visitors which ought to follow the completion of the canal. The Cape Cod shore, and the many inland ponds, afford excellent summering places for the visitor.

"The greater accessibility will mean that more and more visitors, especially from New York, to whom the advantages of summering at the Cape are not well known, will summer there. Thus Summer resorts will thrive and property will be affected by the generally improved conditions."

DO YOU WANT FREE EXPERT ADVICE ON REALTY MATTERS?

Batch of Answers to Queries Submitted to Information Bureau on Real Estate.

Address all questions to the Real Estate Information Bureau, Boston AMERICAN. Questions should be plainly written on only one side of the paper. Full name and address of the inquirer must appear, or the question will be disregarded. Place on the inquiry a letter and a number, under which look for the reply. While using every endeavor to be accurate, the AMERICAN does not guarantee, nor will it be held responsible for the accuracy of its replies. Where realty outside the State is involved, answers may be subject to delay of one or two weeks.

No. A-43—Under no circumstances would it be advisable to make any payments on the lot. To award a lot as a prize for solving a picture puzzle and then to persuade the prize-winner to exchange it for another lot more advantageously situated by paying the difference, is a device frequently used by crooked real estate developers.

If the lots were all that they are represented to be—well situated and with flawless titles—the concern developing them would not be obliged to offer them as prizes. Good lots are in demand everywhere.

We are receiving [illegible] complaints from persons who have [illegible] for exchanging the [illegible] lot for another lot and paying the difference, it would be advisable to see the lots in question and have the title scrutinized by a competent attorney.

G-35—The solution of your problem depends in a large measure upon your annual income and the amount of cash you now have on hand. You should have on hand at least one-third of the amount you expect to pay for your home. In case of a man with a moderate income it would probably be better to purchase a house than build one. There are a number of snug homes on the market and a careful, shrewd buyer could purchase one to advantage.

A mortgage is [illegible] loan with real estate as security. A first mortgage is the first lien on the property. In case the property is foreclosed, holder of the first mortgage has precedence. A second mortgage is what the name implies—a mortgage upon the equity. In foreclosure proceedings, what is left after satisfying the first mortgage is applied to the second mortgage.

It might be advisable to place the facts before a reliable real estate broker and be guided by his advice.

No. 202—In case you have the written agreement of the former [illegible] to make repairs, you can force him to attend to them. If agreement was oral, unless you have witnesses to sustain your contention it would be difficult to compel him to make the repairs.

W. B. P.—Under the Massachusetts statutes a laborer may place a lien upon a property for labor performed for the sub-contractor on the property, with or without the consent of the owner. In case of material supplied to the sub-contractor, however, the person furnishing the materials must furnish notice in advance to the owner of the building of his intention to lay a lien on the property, and he [illegible] the consent of the owner [illegible]. This action must precede the delivery of the materials.

Hence, if you have not the owner's permission to attach the property, the [illegible] course for you to pursue would be to attach the money due the sub-contractor for his work upon the building, or to attach any other assets that the sub-contractor may have.

No. 4—Property encumbered by a mortgage may be sold or transferred with the consent of the person holding the mortgage.

D. B. M.—The concern about which you inquire is one that is giving away lots as awards in puzzle contests. As we have stated in this column several times, good lots can always be sold to advantage. Lots that are given away free as prizes are usually of little value.

No. 2429—What legal hold you may have on the concern in question we cannot determine without more specific information concerning the contract which you signed with them. If the claim of the company is in accordance with the facts, you can do little to force them to give up the warranty deed for the lot. Even at best, the cost of the litigation would be far in excess of the value of the lot. At any rate, it would be inadvisable to make any further payments on the lot.

H. J. B.—If you feel that your property is overrated by the assessors, you should file a petition with them for an abatement of the rate. If they refuse to furnish an abatement, the only recourse open to you would be to bring the matter before the law courts.

No. 1876—The firm in question has been in business for a number of years in this city. So far as [illegible] ascertained, no complaint has [illegible] been made against them by purchasers of their lots. The change in the firm of name was brought about for [illegible] which do not affect the integrity of the firm.

G-68—It would probably be impossible, and it would be extremely inadvisable to purchase real estate without cash. You could not secure the necessary funds from a co-operative bank because they are permitted by law to loan only a maximum of 50 per cent. of the value of the property.

No. A-333—The best course for you to pursue would be to secure [illegible] signatures of surrounding property-owners to a petition, protesting against the dancing bungalow, which should be presented to the Mayor. If the feeling is sufficiently strong, a hearing will be granted, which may result in the revocation of the permit. The issuing of such licenses rests entirely with the Mayor's office.

Sell Many Lots at Arlington Terrace

A number of sales of house lots at Arlington Terrace were reported last week. Twenty-five per cent of the property has already been sold. The lots have areas from 5,000 to 10,000 square feet and are restricted to one and two-family house. The property lies just above the centre of the town, with frontage on Forest street and Summer street extension.

SALE OF NEXT TO WORTHLESS CAPE LAND IS CHARGED

E. B. Howland, Sandwich Assessor, Declares Land Sold at $25 a Lot Is Worth $1 Per Acre.

E. B. Howland, chief of the Sandwich Board of Assessors, declares that lots of land near Sandwich, offered for sale in and around Greater Boston at a price ranging from $20 to $30 each, are not worth as many cents.

This statement is made by Howland, in response to a letter sent him by the Real Estate Information Bureau of the AMERICAN, requesting information about lots near Sandwich. This request was made as the result of a number of inquiries concerning [illegible] in this section, received at the AMERICAN office.

AWARDED LOT FREE.

One inquiry about these lots was received from Mrs. Mary A. Sexton of No. 360 Putnam Avenue, Cambridge. Mrs. Sexton writes: "I would like information about a lot of land in the town of Sandwich No. 19, on plan of Lawrence Park."

Mrs. Sexton declared to an AMERICAN reporter that she had received the lot free about a year ago as an award for a puzzle-picture contest which appeared in an advertisement in a Boston newspaper. Mrs Sexton said that an agent of the company appeared later and endeavored to sell her the adjoining lot for about twenty-five dollars. Mrs. Sexton did not purchase, she said, because it was too far out.

Recently an attempt to sell these lots has been revived. A few weeks ago an agent approached H. Hubbard, who has an office at No. 11 High street, and endeavored to persuade him to purchase some lots there. Before agreeing to purchase, Mr Hubbard wrote to the AMERICAN'S Real Estate Information Bureau requesting information.

SMALL CHANCE FOR INCREASE.

The main selling point advanced by the agents who are pushing the sale of this property is the Cape Cod canal now under construction. They declare that with the completion of the canal the property near that section will multiply in value.

According to Howland, the possibility of an increase in the value of the lots within fifty years is very remote. The letter from Mr Howland, with reference to the value of these lots, follows:

"The land, known as Lawrence Park, is not located in the town of Sandwich, although deeds were drawn in this way. It is over the town line in the town of Bourne.

"As to the value of the land, we think it is worth less than one dollar per acre. I think they paid one dollar for it, and have cut it into lots of [illegible] square feet.

"The land is located about three and one-half miles from any village and will not be worth, in my judgment, one cent more in fifty years than it is now.

"We have three or four hundred of these lots in Sandwich, we list them, but they are under no assessment."

Slight Decrease in Mortgage Activity

Placing of Small Mortgages Features Mortgage Business.

The increased placing of small mortgages and a decrease in the number of large mortgages recorded were the principal developments of the past week in the mortgage market.

While the week's business showed a slight decrease from that of the preceding wek, it was normal and compared favorably with the business of the same week a year ago.

Money for investment in mortgages continues to be plentiful, with no sign of decreasing. This fact, coupled with the favorable rates which may be obtained for gilt-edged mortgages, makes it likely that the general activity of the season will be sustained.

"Wollaston Farm" Placed on Market

"Wollaston Farm," a well-known property in that town, has been opened and placed on the market. This estate has a large water frontage on Quincy Bay and Sea street. All the lots are subject to restrictions to confine it to residential use.

Streets cut through the property are at least forty feet wide. Wide walks on the principal streets will be of concrete or granolithic.

The property will be developed for the owners by Charles F. Adams, 2d, and Arthur Adams, trustees of the late Fanny C. Adams. H. T. Whitman of Quincy is the selling agent.

McCormack Buys Old Lawrence Estate

The G. A. McCormack Land Company of Medford is the purchaser of the old Lawrence estate in Medford, bordering on Middlesex Fells reservation. The estate contains about one hundred acres. It has a frontage of about 3,000 feet on the Fellsway. Mr McCormack intends to develop this property in the Fall. He will cut it into house lots, which will be placed on the market at prices ranging from two to six cents per foot.

Change Factory to Office Building

Plans for remodeling the five-story factory at the corner of Blake and Willow streets, Lynn, into an office building are being prepared by J. Chandler Fowler. The building is owned by Charles E. Rolfe. After alterations it will contain from sixty-five to seventy offices. The altered structure will contain an elaborate facade, marble floors and mural decorations.

Plan New Theatre for Cambridge

Plans for a fireproof theatre to be located on Massachusetts avenue, between Essex and Norfolk streets, Cambridge, are being prepared by Clarence H. Blackall, a well-known architect. The theatre will have a seating capacity of [illegible].

TWO ARRESTS IN $1,000,000 N. Y. REALTY SWINDLE

NEW YORK, June 13.—Two officers of the Monaton Realty Investing Corporation, D. Maujer McLaughlin, promoter and director, and Pierre M. Locker, president were taken as prisoners before U. S. Judge W. I. Grubb yesterday. They are charged with devising a scheme to defraud the mails through swindling small and inexperienced investors out of amounts that aggregate $1,000,000.

The Monaton is one of the many "real estate" companies which acquire small holdings and then issue mortgage bonds without commensurate securities. The bonds really are nothing but promissory notes. The present action is extremely important as it may be made the test for dealing with other concerns of a similar character.

McLaughlin and Locker were arraigned under indictments [illegible] returned by the Federal Grand Jury. Both pleaded not guilty and were released in $[illegible] bail.

The Monaton's victims were sought in the savings bank class everywhere. To give the scheme the appearance of respectability ministers and [illegible] were employed as agents. These agents canvassed small communities. Ten per cent. dividends were held forth as a lure.

Maximilliam Morgenthau, temporary receiver for the Monaton in Attorney General Carmody's [illegible] suit has stated that the [illegible] treasury did not [illegible] money to pay for an accountant to examine its books, and that he was obliged to ask the assistance of the force of the State [illegible] of Banks.

Assistant United States Attorney Hartridge, in charge of the prosecution, said yesterday: "The recent decision of the Court of Appeals in the case of Jacobs vs. the Monaton Realty Investing Corporation has nothing to do with this criminal action. The question involved in this case is whether or not these persons obtained money by false representations, not whether or not they were authorized by the State [illegible] to carry on a [illegible]

The work of obtaining [illegible] for the Grand Jury's indictment was done by Postoffice Inspector H. B. Mayhew.

D. Mauier McLaughlin is president of the Windsor Land & Improvement Company, which is said to be the parent of twenty-seven subsidiary land companies on Long Island. His annual salary is said to be $25,000.

As a business corporation, the Monaton, under its charter, could deal in real estate and loan money, but without the authority of the State banking department it made contracts with individuals by which in consideration of the payment of certain money, it agreed to return some of

FAMOUS WALPOLE TIRES

FROM THE—

RECEIVERS of the WALPOLE TIRE COMPANY

I purchased for cash all the high-grade tires they had remaining, amounting to sixty seven thousand five hundred and ninety dollars. It is a well-known fact that these tires were listed to sell for more than any other American tire manufactured. I have now about fifteen hundred on hand, and will make the following prices with the intentions of cleaning them up within the next ten days.

Prices named are lower than what other dealers are asking for seconds.

Detroiter $925
With Self-starting and Lighting System $125 Extra

A large part of the joy of motoring is lost unless you have a car you can be proud of.

"Detroiter" owners are proud owners. They drive a car of distinction, one with ample power and embodying the very highest priced principles of construction.

And yet—a car that runs as economically as any five-passenger automobile manufactured, bar none.

This 1914 "Detroiter" with its big motor, added refinements, and faultless Detroiter-Remy Starter, is now on our floors. See it.

ARRESTS IN N. Y. REALTY FRAUD

According to the indictment, the duping of investors was made possible by the corporation obtaining title to property in good localities by payment of a small amount on account, and giving as security thirty-seven parcels in Brooklyn real estate, mortgaged to more than its full value, to cover a bond issue of $4,000,000.

Inspector Mayhew says the company, between 1907 and 1912 paid dividends aggregating $200,000, and that this money was derived from the sale of stock.

At one time two ministers on the M... staff were active in influencing men and women to part with hard-earned savings representing years of self-denial. These men were John C. Chapman, a Presbyterian clergyman of Hackettstown, N. J., a director of the company and editor of the M... Monthly, a little illustrated magazine circulated by the company, and Charles E. Nash, a Baptist minister, who had charge of the company's branch offices in New England and elsewhere.

Among persons swindled by means of the ... the indictment mentions Rev. L. C. Knuth, of No. 123 La Belle street, Dayton, O., Mrs. Franzetta P. Adams, of No. 119 Massachusetts avenue, Providence, R. I., and Patrick McDermott, of No. 191 West Thirteenth street, this city.

McLaughlin is said to be prominent in political circles in Brooklyn, and Looker is said to have failed while in the brokerage business some years ago.

McLaughlin last night said: "I have not been actively connected with the management of the company for several years. When the proper time comes to answer to the allegations in the new indictment they will be satisfactorily answered."

Records at the Storrs Contest

The Leghorns are more than keeping the pace in the laying contest at Storrs. They have set a new record by winning the first thirteen places in the thirty-first week. First honors were easily won by A. B. Hall, Wallingford, Conn., with a yield of 60 eggs. Second place, however, was contested for by four pens which yielded 57 eggs each. Three pens tied for third place with a score of 56 eggs each. All of the above pens are White Leghorns. The English Leghorns that have outstripped the others for the past three weeks fell off eight eggs and were thus out of the running, but these birds have had bred into them such a store of vigor and vitality that they will undoubtedly "come back."

The awards for the month of May have been announced as follows: The blue ribbon or first prize goes to Tom Barron, the Englishman, whose White Leghorns produced 258 eggs. Second prize was won by by Wolverine Poultry Farm, Grand Rapids, Mich., whose Buff Leghorns produced 252 eggs during the month.

Mrs. K. E. Woodruff, New Haven, Conn., and Marwood Poultry Farm, Butler, Pa., both White Leghorns, tied for third place with 242 eggs each. It is interesting to note in this connection that not only these four pens, but six others as well exceeded during the month of May the best previous monthly record of 231 made in April.

Get After the Little Red Mites

"Swat the Rooster" campaigns have been inaugurated for the purpose of producing better market eggs, but unless we smite the mites we may not have any eggs at all.

The management of the competition does not expect to find mites on the plant in view of the sanitary conditions that are maintained, and yet it is realized that a poultryman must be ever on his guard at this season of the year against such an insidious enemy.

Lice that infest the hens undoubtedly cause some discomfort, but do not begin to work the havoc among stock that the mites accomplish. It must be remembered, too, that the mite does not live on the hen. Its habits are nocturnal, much like those of the bedbug. He hides in the cracks and crevices of the house where he must be sought and destroyed. If taken in time spraying with a 5 or 10 per cent solution of coal tar product may destroy the mites. If, however, they have been permitted to multiply and are present in large numbers it is probably much safer to paint the under side of the roosts and other supports with equal parts of kerosene and crude carbolic acid. Another important point is that one swat is not blow to destroy all the mites. They are exceedingly persistent and must be relentlessly pursued.

Poultry and Supplies.

YOUNG CHICKS

die of bowel trouble more than any other cause. It is estimated that of every 1000 chicks hatched each year less than 400 reach marketable size. Germozone users raise, usually, 90% of chicks hatched. Germozone keeps the bowels regular. It prevents diarrhoea from overdrinking of water; from eating musty or spoiled food, etc. It should be given in drinking water twice a week from the day they are hatched. It stops the loss. Every chick that dies cuts badly into the profit from the rest. Every chick saved will pay the cost of a bottle of Germozone.

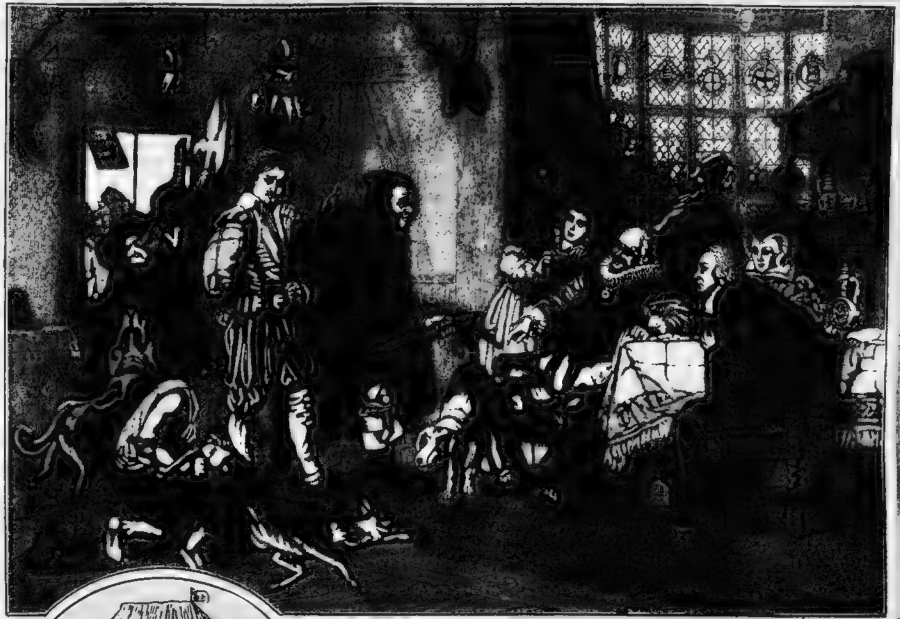
An American Scholar Restores Shakespeare His Character

Professor Wallace's Remarkable Analysis of 3.000.000 Documents Which Prove The Immortal Bard Never To Have Been A Roistering, Reckless Profligate And Shows Just Where His Famous Theatre Stood:



Young Shakespeare Brought Before Magistrate Lucy for Deer Stealing. One of the Episodes That Have Been Used to Give the Poet a Profligate Character.
Painting by A. Schrader.

Shakespeare Reading "Hamlet" to Queen Elizabeth and Her Court. An Indication of the High Esteem in Which He Was Held.

PROFESSOR CHARLES WILLIAM WALLACE, of the University of Nebraska, has made a remarkable series of discoveries in London which throw new light on Shakespeare's character. They prove the poet to have been a good citizen, who took a kindly interest in all who were associated with him. They also show that he was a man of high standing in the community, looked up to by private persons and officials alike. They dispose of the ancient legends that he was a reckless roisterer who spent his days and nights in bibulous carousing with fellow poets and neglected his social and civic duties.

Documents examined by Professor Wallace establish beyond question the site of the Globe Theatre, which was built by Shakespeare and his associates. This is a matter which has generally been misunderstood by English authors and students of Shakespeare.

In the course of his investigations, Professor Wallace, assisted by his wife, has examined nearly 3,000,000 documents in the Public Record Office of London. He is now generally regarded as the highest living authority on the events of Shakespeare's life. He has found hundreds of documents mentioning Shakespeare's name which no modern investigator has ever seen. Shakespearean scholars have engaged in endless discussions about the poet, but it was too much labor to resort to that endless mine of original information, the Public Record Office.

So thorough have been Professor Wallace's labors that he has examined the records of the Sewer Commission for the Counties of Kent and Surrey since 1599 down to recent times, in order to establish the exact site of Shakespeare's Globe Theatre.

Of most human interest are Professor Wallace's researches into the private life of Shakespeare. People have always shown a strong tendency to dwell on the moral shortcomings of Shakespeare, which they kindly suggest must be overlooked on account of the greatness of his genius. Everybody recalls that he was punished for deer stealing in the park of Sir Thomas Lucy, near Stratford-on-Avon, in his youth, and that as a result of this and perhaps other similar episodes he was sent away from home in disgrace. More importance has been attached to these episodes than they warrant, for doubtless they were innocent outbreaks of high-spirited youth.

Then there is a strangely persistent impression that Shakespeare, while in London, was a heavy drinker. There is no doubt that many of the Elizabethan poets drank deeply, and several of them, like Christopher Marlowe and Robert Greene, came to a tragic end in consequence of reckless living. The amount of liquor they consumed at the Mermaid Tavern and other resorts seems to have been very large. Undoubtedly Shakespeare formed one of this merry company occasionally. There were no clubs or literary societies in those days, and the only place where a poet could meet his friends and unburden his soul was a tavern or inn.

It is indeed curious to find how the drinking tradition clings to Shakespeare's name. The site of the house he occupied when he was lessee of the Globe Theatre is now occupied by a saloon or "public house," as the English now call a tavern. The site which English literary men have wrongly selected as that of the Globe Theatre is a modern brewery. All over the country there are inns called "The Shakespeare's Head."

Now, all Professor Wallace's minute researches have tended to discredit these old prejudices and old legends, and to establish a splendid moral character for the world's greatest dramatist. The manner in which Shakespeare exerted himself to bring about a marriage between Mary Mountjoy, his landlord's daughter, and young Stephen Bellott, with whom she had had a misunderstanding, shows his kindness of heart and good moral principles. Again and again the records show the remarkably high esteem in which he was held by public officials in Southwark, self-important persons, who would certainly have had no consideration for a disreputable poet or play-actor.

Professor Wallace lays stress on a document left by the commissioners appointed to make an investigation on the estate of Sir Thomas Brend, the deceased owner of the land on which the Globe Theatre stood. This report speaks of the site as being in the occupation of "William Shakespeare and others."

"This," writes Professor Wallace, "may fairly be taken as an incidental recognition of Shakespeare's eminence among official residents of the immediate neighborhood. The commissioners lived there, close to the 'glory of the Bank,' as Ben Jonson called the Globe, and knew the theatre and the genius that presided in it. They were all men of standing, who apparently knew Shakespeare so well for his plays that his name obscured the names of his associates. It was to them, indeed, Shakespeare's theatre. Their source of information was not simply the deeds, none of which thus singles out Shakespeare. It is as if they said:

"'We, the undersigned, personally know William Shakespeare, the dramatist, as the most eminent man among the company who have recently built the Globe Playhouse in our midst.'"

The American scholar then calls attention to a deed of Oct. 7, 1601, which he has found. In this, Nicholas Brend, heir of Sir Thomas, conveys the theatre site in trust to certain persons as security for a debt. The description mentions only "Richard Burbadge and William Shackspeare gent" as tenants of "the playhouse," the dramatist and the principal actor of his plays thus both overshadowing the rest of the company—even the men who conducted the business affairs of the theatre.

"William Shackspeare gent!" That quaint, naive phrase is eloquent of the high position the bard held, in Professor Wallace's opinion. It means that he was accorded the social rank of a gentleman, which was a considerable distinction in the Elizabethan age. That a playwright and actor, of a calling that had hitherto been classed with vagabonds, should receive this distinction is particularly remarkable.

Chief among the documents that establish the exact and unquestionable location of the Globe Theatre is the lease of February 21, 1599, by Nicholas Brend, the landlord, and by Shakespeare and four associates, as lessees

In brief, this lease establishes the fact that the Globe Theatre was just south of the Bankside, with Dead Man's Place on the east, Horseshoe Alley on the west and Maiden Lane on the south. The Bankside was the name of the southern bank of the Thames, in Southwark, just south of the City of London, a location near to the heart of the city, but cheap and not desired for dwelling purposes. It must have been a horrible spot, a stretch of mud surrounded by open sewers, a fact mentioned by Ben Jonson.

Proving the site of the Globe to be on the north side of Maiden Lane completely discredits the site which now bears an imposing inscription declaring that Shakespeare's theatre stood there. This memorial was placed on the wall of a brewery on the south side of Maiden Lane about four years ago. Sir Beerbohm Tree, Sir James M. Barrie and some of the leading actors, playwrights and public men of England took part in the solemn ceremony of erroneously honoring the brewery.

Professor Wallace has found many entries in the records of the Sewer Commission that prove the location of the theatre. For instance, here is one showing very plainly that it was on the north side of Maiden Lane, sometimes called "Maid Lane":

> It is Ordered that Burbidge and Heminges and others, the owners of the Playhouse called the Globe in Maidlane shall before the xxth day of Aprill next pull vp and take cleane out of the Sewar the props or postes wch stand vnder theire bridge on the North side of Maydlane vpon paine to forf (eit). XXS.

This quaint little entry in itself means much to the student of the Elizabethan drama. It shows that the audiences of Shakespeare's theatre had to enter the building by crossing a bridge passing over an open sewer. Other disagreeable experiences awaited them, but they were a robust class. Most of them were herded in the pit of the theatre, where they drank and fought. Noblemen and other persons of quality sat on the stage, while the prosperous occupants of the galleries enjoyed the opportunity of throwing things at the mob in the pit and sometimes at the stage. We must not doubt, however, that many of this hardy race were inspired by high thoughts, for here they listened to "Hamlet" and to nearly all the immortal Shakespeare's plays.

ENCOURAGING FACTS About the AIR We Breathe

FEW DISEASE GERMS in the Atmosphere, Even When It Is Full of SEWER GAS

U[illegible] the air we breathe has had [illegible] carrier of the germs of [illegible] investigation and [illegible] gradually stripped the [illegible] its supporters, until [illegible] and anthrax, hardly [illegible] whose spread can be [illegible] a carrier of its germs.

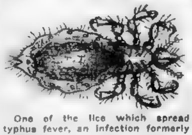
F[illegible] the medical fraternity as well as [illegible] believed that [illegible] was a disease [illegible] from the atmosphere. That idea is not yet wholly stamped out. The air of damp and swampy localities is still called "malarial," and the prevalence of chills and fever in such localities is popularly charged against the air instead of against the germ-carrying mosquitoes which breed there.

It was the same with regard to yellow fever. But now it is an accepted scientific fact that the germs of those diseases are not carried by the air at all. They develop within the bodies of two distinct species of mosquitoes, and the original source of infection of human beings is only through the toxins conveyed in mosquito bites.

It has been discovered that air freshly expelled from human lungs, either healthy or diseased, is sterile except at such close range that it may carry drops of moisture containing disease germs. Even sewer gas, poisonous as it is, does not carry any of the germs which exist in the sewage itself.

Oxygen and ozone and sunlight are most efficient germicides. They are not mediums in which germs of any kind can long exist in a harmful state, with almost the sole exception of the tubercle bacillus. Even in that case the danger of infection is much greater through other mediums.

The scientific support given to the germ theory of disease at first directed stronger suspicions against the minute forms of bacteria such as could float in the air. Little thought was given to the evident difficulty of separating these small particles from the discharges of the diseased body and projecting into the air.



One of the lice which spread typhus fever, an infection formerly believed to be carried by the air.

Then came the scientific investigations which demonstrated that bacteria are not given given off from moist surfaces and liquids in a state of rest. It was shown, however, that infective bacteria could be carried in the fine droplets of saliva which are thrown from the mouth during loud talking or [illegible] quiet respiration.

In this [illegible] the most careful [illegible] been made by Dr. Winslow [illegible] ject, to determine the proportion [illegible] tities of disease germs contained [illegible] sewer gas. It is well known, of co[illegible] the chief of all carriers of disease g[illegible]

But the number of such germs found [illegible] gas by Winslow was so small that [illegible] to make further observations. [illegible] samples of air from the soil-pipes of [illegible] be found sewage bacteria only [illegible] when there was splashing of [illegible] moment of examination. [illegible] to escape from a drainage [illegible] pipe or from a [illegible] were never found. [illegible] disease bacteria, such as [illegible] bacillus, must be far less numerous [illegible]

The entire absence [illegible] of sewer air, taken elsewhere than in the [illegible] vicinity of splashing, [illegible] danger from this source. But perhaps this is best shown by a comparison given in Dr. Winslow's own words.

"In a surface water of good quality, like that of New York City, the colon bacillus can almost invariably be isolated from 10 c. c. This means a slight degree of intestinal pollution, but experience has shown that the chance of infection from such water is but slight; and we drink it without serious alarm.

If one were to breathe for twenty-four hours the undiluted air of a house-drainage system, at any point not immediately infected by mechanical splashing, it appears that less than fifty intestinal bacteria would be taken in, for the daily consumption of air is about 10,000 liters, and in 200 liters I obtained negative results from air of this sort. In drinking New York water twice as many colon bacilli are ingested every day, if 1,000 c.m. is a small amount for daily consumption. So there would be less danger of contracting disease from continually breathing the air of a vent pipe, or of a soil pipe, except where liquid is actually splashing, than from drinking New York water."

The dread typhus fever, formerly believed to be an [illegible] carried by the air, now is separated from that theoretic source altogether. It has been conclusively [illegible] the body louse can, under ordinary conditions, transmit the disease from man to monkey and from monkey to monkey.

Medical history shows that epidemics of typhus have [illegible] associated with camps and hospitals which were vermin infested.

Science does not deny that the germs of certain diseases do float in dust carried by the air and are transmitted from person to person in that way. But the number carried in that way is comparatively small. As a general thing the air is free from germs of any kind. The only danger is from air-borne dust, in the case of a very few infectious diseases, and from droplets of moisture forcibly expelled from diseased lungs, the air itself, even in such cases, being sterile.

Why SPRING FROSTS Do Gardens SO MUCH HARM

E[illegible] the sudden [illegible] often ex[illegible] in the Spring [illegible] early Summer [illegible] balmy and genial [illegible] all vegetation forward [illegible] almost persuades [illegible] and suddenly [illegible] from the north [illegible] heat of the [illegible] and prevents the [illegible] a relatively [illegible] the cold [illegible] grass [illegible] of trees and shrubs [illegible] fire and [illegible] warm days [illegible] state of [illegible] and beeches [illegible] Yet one or two de[illegible] sufficient seriously to [illegible] degrees just named [illegible] laboratory.

[illegible] researches which Professor [illegible] lately made into the pa[illegible] he found that by [illegible] gradually, or by a few [illegible] could [illegible] a fortnight [illegible] live and thrive in a temperature [illegible] degrees F., or nearly 60 degrees [illegible]

It [illegible] fact which put Professor Winkler [illegible] reason of the trees' sensi[illegible] He found that during the months of September, October, November and December the power of trees and shrubs to resist [illegible] gradually until it reaches its climax in January, which, in our latitude, is the coldest month of the year. This power is maintained until the second half of February, when it decreases rapidly, especially if the weather be warm, until at length it reaches the point when, as has been said, the young shoots are withered by a cold which is hardly sufficient to freeze water.

This is not a question of age, because, as Professor Winkler's experiments showed him, the leaves of evergreen plants can not only resist low temperatures even when they occur suddenly, but their endurance is greater when they are young than when they are old. One is therefore, tempted to think that we have here a phenomenon of what is sometimes called atavism, or a return to the primitive conditions of the race. The firs and other similar trees have always been indigenous to the Arctic or sub-Arctic countries, and are, therefore, indifferent to changes of temperature, whether sudden or gradual. Oaks, beeches and other trees, on the contrary, come from a warmer climate than ours, but have succeeded in adapting themselves to our Winters by a long and gradual process of acclimatization.

This is in accordance with the law of the survival of the fittest, which leads to the development and accentuation of those qualities in the individual which make for the persistence of the race. But these characteristics, painfully and laboriously acquired in the course of many centuries, are sometimes wholly or temporarily lost in a sudden change of environment. It is as if a steel spring, quiescent and apparently constant to its new form when coiled, still retained within it the power and desire to return to its original form of a straight bar.

Thus dogs, probably the earliest of domesticated animals, when transferred to a tropical country, such as Central Africa, lose in a few generations most of the characteristics they have acquired in Europe, and revert more and more to the type of the jackal and the wolf. Thus their ears, whatever their breed, tend to become pointed, their coats turn sandy or rufous, and their bark becomes a howl. Some attempt has been made to show that this is the result of disease, and thus resembles the effect of malaria on the human constitution. Yet the Egyptian dog of Pharaonic times possessed, as we see by the monuments, those very characteristics; and as he was certainly domesticated before the European animal, it is probable that these are the original features of the race.

One might wonder whether the same force is not at work with mankind, and whether in a sudden change of surroundings they do not revert to the ways of the natives of their original habitat.

A Machine to Prevent Collisions

THE latest suggestion for preventing rear-end collisions on railroads is a mechanical flagman. This would take the place of the rear brakeman of a train, who, when the train has occasion to stop on the main line, is expected to go back a quarter of a mile or so and flag any approaching train.

Because brakemen sometimes fail to go so far back as they should, or fail to go out and back [illegible] resulting collisions, the idea [illegible] to some inventors to have a machine perform these duties. Such a machine could be [illegible] a little handcar or track bicycle [illegible] hauled at the rear end of a passenger train.

On the occasion of a stop the conductor or some other employe in the last car turns a lever, and the little handcar then drops on the track and runs back two thousand feet by electric power from storage batteries.

As it runs back it unreels a cable connecting it with the train. Flags and lights are carried on the little car to warn any approaching train.

One suggestion adds a plan for dropping magnetized torpedoes on the track at the end of the two-thousand-feet trip, with the idea that these torpedoes would adhere to the track and be exploded by the next oncoming train. When the train is ready to start the conductor in the back car turns a [illegible] and in about a minute [illegible] mechanical brakeman comes running back and snugly nests itself again at the tail of the train.

ACRES OF FISH Going to WASTE

STRANGE, that while there is so much complaint about the cost of living a supply of food [illegible] at our doors, as one might [illegible] sufficient to maintain the entire population of the United States, should be allowed to go to waste!

This estimate may be considered authoritative, inasmuch as it comes from the Government Fisheries Bureau. The [illegible] to be found over an area of about 10,000 square miles of sea bottom extending from Cape Cod to Cape Hatteras.

This [illegible] the reason that the bottom [illegible] depth of 100 to 600 fathoms, and fish for this reason are beyond the reach of all ordinary apparatus. All of it is almost literally paved with flounders of a species nearly related to the much-esteemed European sole and which [illegible] superior [illegible] the so-called [illegible] which [illegible] the famil[illegible]

The mouths of these soles are [illegible] that they cannot be caught with a hook. But there is one form of apparatus which would serve admirably for their capture—namely, the beam trawl, which is a huge net on runners, dragged like a sled, with gaping mouth, over the ocean [illegible] This contrivance, though [illegible] in European waters, has been [illegible] known in our own country until recently.

When it is explained that [illegible] net is seventy-five feet long and mouth fifty feet wide, one realizes what its "swallow" must be like. Recently four steam vessels at Boston [illegible] with beam trawls [illegible] of them went [illegible] of 25,000 pounds of [illegible] the sole-gatherers are [illegible] if apparatus of that kind were used for taking them.

There [illegible] kinds of [illegible] would be obtained by this means from the [illegible] of bottom. One of these [illegible] which [illegible] then only [illegible] was supposed to [illegible] under the sea. In 1882 over thousands of square miles, hundreds of millions of these beautiful [illegible] weigh[illegible] five to fifty [illegible] apiece were found floating [illegible] dead or dying [illegible] But not long ago the [illegible] discovered by the Fish [illegible] Grampus, and [illegible] is now as plentiful as

A generation ago the flounder, or "flat fish," was despised, being regarded with esteem only by the small boy. He knew that it was mighty good to eat. And even nowadays there are comparatively few people who realize that the delicious "filet de sole" of the restaurants (fried in crumbs and served with tartar sauce) is nothing in the world but flounder. So great has the demand for flounders become within recent years that the Fisheries Bureau has undertaken to hatch them artificially. This year, at stations on the Massachusetts and Maine coasts, it will turn out nearly 1,000,000,000 baby flat fishes.

For catching these flounders in New England waters, small beam trawls are used, hauled by sailboats and motorboats. All of those hatched artificially are of one species, the small "Winter flounder." But the deep sea flounder is much finer, both in texture and in flavor, and that it should not be brought to market, though easily obtainable in unlimited numbers a short distance off the coast, certainly seems a pity.

How Science Hopes Soon to Create a Race of "MISSING LINKS"

LIKE the pterodactyl and other fiery flying dragons of the past; like the sea serpent, the mermaid, the Lorelei and [illegible] that ranged our American plains, [illegible] family is doomed to extinction.

Not only are the chimpanzees, orang-outangs and great gorillas being driven into their last [illegible] strongholds, but the rhesus and gibbon [illegible] the smaller sort are being rap[illegible] [illegible] hundred years from [illegible] Chicago scientist, will [illegible] monkeys [illegible] something [illegible] at once.

[illegible] experiments [illegible] great [illegible] ten years ago by [illegible] Metchnikoff and continued by [illegible] led to the discovery [illegible] paralysis and para[illegible] preventing typhoid and [illegible] facts that make for the saving of human lives. The discoveries about similar behavior and of facts common to man and monkeys, which can never be learned [illegible] experiments upon other animals, mean that the extinction of the apes and their near relatives would set the advance of science back thousands of years.

So serious and acute has the extending extinction and disappearance of the monkey tribes become that a conference between several governments is now going on for the purpose of discussing the feasibility of building in the Canary Islands a gigantic breeding station for all kinds of monkeys with a view of repopulating the world with these useful creatures.

In this way not only can the prospective extermination of the primates be checked, but remarkable experiments and cross-breeding tests can be carried out on a large scale. [illegible] varieties and hybrids among [illegible] apes could be bred to [illegible] to study the Mendelian law of heredity, as well as to expose the fallacies inherent in human eugenics. It is hoped even that a super-monkey might be evolved that would approach the mental and physical state of primitive man. [illegible] beyond the bounds of possibility.

So close even to-day are the orang-outang to the human family, especially in the [illegible] chemistry, anatomy and psychology, that when a guinea pig or rabbit [illegible] with the blood of this animal a certain [illegible] stance is formed which is exactly the [illegible] as that formed when man's blood [illegible] tested.

What to Do for TANGO FOOT

TANGO foot is the very newest disease. [illegible] prevalent wherever the [illegible] are in vogue, and physicians [illegible] report a steadily [illegible] number of cases.

[illegible] is all due to the immense strain [illegible] tendons by the [illegible] especially the tango and [illegible] to some extent the complicated [illegible] of the hesitation waltz. A [illegible] who has attempted the new dance [illegible] they call for great flexibility of the [illegible] Over-indulgence in dancing can easily [illegible] the inflammation which doctors now [illegible] as tango foot.

[illegible] first symptom is usually a dull pain on [illegible] of the leg just above the ankle [illegible] the next few days the pain becomes [illegible] marked and there is considerable stiffness when the foot is bent. Going up and [illegible] stairs is painful, especially the latter [illegible] of the affected region is sensitive [illegible] slightest pressure.

[illegible] cessation from dancing and a limi[illegible] of walking is all that is usually [illegible] to effect a cure. Putting the foot in a plaster cast or binding it with an adhesive plaster does more harm than good, for the pressure irritates and causes needle stiffness. Massage with alcohol or a simple soap liniment is recommended, and good results are often obtained by applying a mixture, consisting of one part of aconite, one part of belladonna tincture and two parts of iodine.

How to Treat YOUR BODY to Make It LITHE and GRACEFUL

By WILLIAM LEE HOWARD, M. D.

BY a perfectly normal manner of living a man or woman can become as lithe and graceful as an Indian [illegible] the human gazelle. The human [illegible] if treated as are the bodies [illegible] of swift moving animals throughout nature, is the most graceful of all [illegible] things. Under ideal conditions man and [illegible] are beautiful in their movements, and in response [illegible] all muscular impulses show appearances of health [illegible]

Watch [illegible] after resting or sleeping. He rises [illegible] on his knees where he remains [illegible] assumes the upright posture. Now [illegible] off at speed, the beautiful animal [illegible] limb, then [illegible] until all four [illegible] extended and flexed. He will then [illegible] wobble his [illegible] shake his body [illegible] Now he is ready to move leisurely [illegible] morning's drink of pure cool water and [illegible] for a swim.

[illegible] graceful hound or [illegible] as he gets [illegible] the same preliminaries before 'get [illegible] move on.' So does the graceful horse, the pea[illegible] the wonderfully agile zebra.

[illegible] work horses are [illegible] and awkward [illegible] are kept in narrow stalls, where [illegible] necessary for grace [illegible] are impossible. The [illegible] are [illegible] aroused by a harsh command, and at once spring [illegible] machine, motor car [illegible] full speed with a jump [illegible] would soon ruin the best machine.

The reason for all these preliminary stretchings is to [illegible] extend the muscular fibres and the blood vessels, nourishing them. The stretching first narrows and then [illegible] the little arteries, causing a slight [illegible] so getting them ready for the [illegible] to do. It is a warning [illegible] whole human machinery to get into activity.

Gracefulness is only a state of perfect [illegible] throughout the muscular system. A woman [illegible] developed in her muscles through vigorous [illegible] be awkward and ungraceful. Another woman [illegible] comparatively weak in muscular structure [illegible] her gracefulness be in good [illegible] and has vitality.

A great deal depends upon how [illegible] how she gets out of bed in the morning and [illegible] to the gazelle she approaches nature [illegible] if a woman of forty is awkward she can [illegible] of the defect by following these rules and [illegible]

Don't jump out of bed suddenly. [illegible] too sudden a jolt and in time will make it knock like the engine of a motor car which has been treated the same way.

Don't get out of bed the moment you awaken. Keep quiet for a few moments to let the conscious brain cells return to their normal activity.

Next, stretch your arms and hands above your head, twisting wrists and fingers. Move slowly but rather forcibly all the upper extremities. Then extend, stretch, each lower limb until you hear every joint down to the toes crack and grate. Get out of bed slowly, and again, without jerking, stretch every movable part of your body—neck, back, abdomen.

Now, when you have gone through the very preliminary movements, which are the real reasons for all the [illegible] gracefulness seen in active animals, you are [illegible] for your cold bath and your water drinking.

INSECTS' Muscles BETTER Than MAN'S

THE latest experiments upon insects have demonstrated the most remarkable muscular powers. A wood beetle less than two inches long can pull a little wagon loaded with thirty times its own weight. When forty-five times the beetle's own weight was piled on the wagon it pulled it an inch. When its [illegible] were attached to a small dynamometer [illegible] apparatus [illegible] measuring muscular power—the [illegible] exerted a force equal to what a man weighing 200 pounds would exert if he were able to raise a ton.

A Hercules beetle proved his right to the appellation, for though he was only three inches long, he pulled twenty times his own weight and walked off with a weight of five pounds on his back. If a proportionate weight were put on a man he would be crushed to the earth.

A house-fly, held by the wings and brought close to a match, lifted it up with its feet. To perform a proportionate feat a man would have to lift a beam [illegible] feet long and 13 inches thick.

An ordinary car-wig, hitched to a little wagon, pulled it when loaded with eight matches. To equal this feat a horse would have to pull 300 beams, each equal to its own weight.

It is an old story that a flea can jump two hundred times its own height in the air. A man would have to jump over the thousand-foot high Eiffel Tower to equal the feat.

The muscles in insects are actually much larger in proportion than in man. When we see an ant dragging a burden larger and heavier than its whole body, it shows how powerful its muscles are. Professor A. Schmidt estimates that to equal the ant's feat a man weighing 200 pounds should be able to lift a ton. This is explicable on the basis of the far greater muscular equipment of the ant, as compared to that of man.

Distressingly Happy "Horrible Examples"

Very Annoying Conduct of Society Girls Who Have Found "Love in a Cottage" While the Conventional Members of Their Own Set Continue to Flock to the Divorce Courts

Mrs. "Len" Thomas, the American Beauty, Who Has Proved the Exception to the Rule by Living Most Happily with the Rich Man She Loved and Wed.

NEWPORT, June 8.

"HOW shocking that Julia French should have married a chauffeur!"

"It may sound very romantic, but when she faces the hard realities she will be unhappy!"

These were typical remarks with which the Newport fashionables greeted the news that the daughter of one of their set had eloped with a young man who ran an automobile for hire.

Now comes the certainty that the society girl who married a respectable young working man is perfectly happy, while her father and mother Mr. and Mrs. Amos Tuck French, who married strictly in their own set, have been divorced and are very unhappy. Previously, her aunt, Mrs. Elsie French Vanderbilt, had obtained a divorce after a marriage with a man very conspicuous in her own set, that had caused unhappiness from the very beginning.

Investigation further shows that many society girls who have married poor or hard working men have been perfectly happy, while it is scarcely necessary to say that all those who have married rich men have not been perfectly happy. Miss Elsie Whelen, the Philadelphia beauty, was considered by parents and friends to have done the ideal thing when she captured the then richest bachelor in New York, "Bobbie" Goelet, for a husband, but only recently she set forth while obtaining a divorce that her married life had been one long history of misery, insult and ill usage.

Miss Vera Gilbert, the handsome daughter of the Charles Pierrepont H. Gilberts, married Randolph Rogers Santini, a young man of excellent family but condemned to work for a living.

Miss Gilbert had been accustomed to a palace on Riverside Drive and a villa at Newport with all the luxuries that they denote. She found that she could be just as happy in a $20 a month cottage near Paterson, N. J., of the type that is occupied by the humblest of New York commuters. Many other cases have occurred where girls of fastidious training have married poor men amid the lamentations of their friends and families and then lived happily ever afterward. As a rule little is said about the happy sequel, and it is an encouragement to romance and high idealism to point out that such things do happen.

The society girls who have married poor men are something like the "horrible examples" of the old-fashioned temperance lecturers. To make their addresses in country villages attractive and easy to understand the workers for sobriety would have two or three men in advanced stages of intoxication in the front row. Then the lecturer could say: "Look at that quivering wretch! How can he look his wife and innocent babe in the eye? How can he take up life's duties to-morrow morning?"

It frequently happened that the horrible example thus pointed out was by far the happiest looking man in the room, and intelligent observers sometimes commented on the fact, thus upsetting the earnest lecturer completely. The circumstances are of course very different in the case of the society girls who have married poor men, but the worldly society people who point to them as horrible examples are very much in the position of the disconcerted temperance lecturers.

The simple truth is that the girls who marry the men they want to and disregard wealth and ancestry are observing the good old American rule that all men and women are created free and equal. It is the only rule that can bring much human happiness in the long run.

Mrs. Jack Geraghty, the former Julia French, is now living the simple and happy life with her husband at Woburn, Mass. They have a handsome little daughter, who has been named after Mrs. Geraghty's mother. On August 11 the Geraghtys will celebrate the third anniversary of the marriage which convulsed Newport society more than any other event of its kind.

The people of Woburn even declare that Mrs. Geraghty is the happiest woman in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, because she is in love with her husband, adores her baby and has plenty of work to do.

One of the terrible things that would happen to Julia French Geraghty in the opinion of society people was having to do her own housework. After she had been waited on by an English butler and a French maid and a host of other servants, they felt sure this would be an unendurable hardship. As a matter of fact, after nearly three years of this sort of hardship Julia French Geraghty enjoys it and looks prettier than ever.

The Geraghtys have a nice little farm at Woburn and are making a good profit by selling vegetables, flowers and other small produce. Mrs. Geraghty's knowledge of needs and tastes in society has been very valuable in showing them what products to raise and how to prepare them attractively for market. Thus an experience which is ordinarily barren of useful results has been turned to good purpose.

Both the young people were always fond of dogs and they now raise French bulldogs and Irish terriers, the sale of which adds considerably to their income. Here again Mrs. Geraghty's knowledge of society tastes has been profitable.

And how does Julia French Geraghty dress? She dresses just like her sisters-in-law, just like the girls of the class into which she married. When she goes out walking with Jack she wears a dark blue serge suit and a plain felt hat. The outfit may have cost as little as $15 or $20.

"Ah," said society people, "how will she feel when she contrasts that plain little ready-made suit with those hundred and fifty dollar tailor-mades she formerly wore? How will she feel when she looks in her glass and compares the plain ready-made hat with those her mother's expensive Fifth avenue milliner used to make for her? Those hats of her past cost from $85 up. The hats of her present cost from $6.50 down."

Well, after three years of trial, Mrs. Geraghty finds that the ready made suits and hats do not mar the happiness that a busy, normal and contented life affords.

Then society said that Mrs. Geraghty would not only miss the comforts and luxuries of her former life, but would feel dreadful because her friends and family and even her mother would have to ostracize her. Even this misfortune has not wholly come to pass. Just after the marriage the family did avoid her when she appeared in public with the husband who had been a chauffeur and whose father had been a cabman, but most of them have thought better of it since.

It is interesting to hear that Mrs. Geraghty is now on good terms with her mother, Mrs. French, her brothers and sisters and her grandmother, Mrs. Stuyvesant Le Roy.

There's only one gloomy figure in the picture. That is Mr. Amos Tuck French, the father. He has never forgiven his daughter for eloping and marrying beneath her. It is believed a different point of view from that of his wife toward the eloping daughter was partly responsible for the divorce of the French couple. Certainly it was at the time Mrs. French began to visit her daughter again that Mr. French left his wife.

The haughty millionaire was completely crushed by the elopement. It is said that he was peculiarly horrified by the fact that his new son-in-law's father had been associated with cabs. Every time a Newport cab man hailed him with the simple word "Cab!" he recoiled in horror. There was something about cabs that grated on the millionaire's nature. He stayed away from his clubs, he stayed indoors as much as he could and he avoided the main streets, all in order to keep away from cabs.

He must be pained to find that his socially distinguished sister, Mrs. Elsie French Vanderbilt, extends a sisterly hand of the chauffeur's bride. His friends believe that he will fly for consolation to his other sister, Lady Cheylesmore, who is married to a prominent member of the British nobility.

You Can Make Money Catching Moles

THE farmer's boy—says the Department of Agriculture in a bulletin soon to be issued—should go into the business of catching moles. There is money in it.

Moles have a very beautiful fur—soft, sleek, glossy, and somewhat resembling sealskin in texture. Quite probably, if skilfully handled, it could be made to imitate sealskin quite satisfactorily. A market for it exists, and it will be more and more in demand, at enchanced prices, as other wild fur-bearing animals are wiped out.

Every boy who knows anything of the country is acquainted with moles and their mode of tunneling under ground. When a disturbance of the surface soil indicates that one is at work, it may readily be throw out with a spade and captured. But the easiest way to catch the animal is to set a trap in such a way as block its burrow. Mr. Mole will certainly run into it and be taken.

Moles sometimes damage lawns. Very little other mischief is properly to be attributed to them. The nibbling of plant roots and other injury commonly blamed upon them should be credited in a great majority of instances to field mice and other small rodents which use mole burrows as runways.

The farmer and gardener, indeed, owe an immense debt to the mole. One of the most abundant of small mammals, it has for ages been engaged in working over the soil to the benefit of plant life. The tunneling it does, with incidental shifting of earth particles, permits better aeration of the soil and favors the entrance of water from the surface.

Moles feed largely on the white grubs which do so much damage to garden crops. They also devour earthworms, beetles, spiders, centipedes, cutworms, and various other such small game. The government experts went to the trouble of cutting open the stomachs of 200 moles, to find out what they ate and in one they came upon the remains of 171 white grubs. This meant one meal, of course. That number of grubs can do a deal of damage to tomatoes and potatoes.

Moles kept in captivity exhibit a most voracious appetite, eating ravenously beefsteak or any kind of fresh meat. They will consume in one day their own weight in food.

New Facts About Common Insects That Spread Disease and Death

Experimenting on a Dog to Prove That Ticks Convey Texas Cattle Fever.

EVERY day brings some new proof of the infinite harm done to human health and happiness by tiny insect carriers of disease

People were still wondering at the surprising discovery that the mosquito was the sole cause of malaria when science proved that the common house fly, which swarms around us every Summer, was far more deadly even than the mosquito. It was shown that the common house fly was the usual carrier of typhoid and other contagious intestinal diseases and of the pus bacillus that makes wounds dangerous. Now it has been proved that the house fly is one of the commonest, possibly the chief, carrier of the deadly germs of tuberculosis. Still other crimes are likely to be proved against the house fly. At the present moment experiments are going on which indicate that the house fly is the agent that spreads hookworm, the disease that wrecks so many lives in the South

"Swat that fly!" is perhaps the greatest civic duty that imposes itself on every American. Now is the time to remember it. It is necessary to save the lives of your children, your wife, your neighbors and yourself. There is no danger that threatens the health of everybody as terribly as the house fly. If it were not for dirt and house flies, contagious and infectious diseases would almost cease to exist in the northern United States. The dirt furnishes the breeding place for the germs and the flies convey them to human beings. The house fly does not, like the mosquito and some other insects, make a specialty of transmitting the germ of one disease, but it is ever ready with its filthy, sticky feet to carry the germs of every disease

Other recent discoveries prove that the bed-bug is one of the most active agents in carrying deadly diseases. This has been shown to be one of the agents that convey bubonic plague, leprosy and tuberculosis. Experiments now going on indicate that this filthy pest has at least a share in transmitting that dreadful disease infantile paralysis, which medical science has had no success in conquering.

Twelve kinds of insects have been positively identified as active carriers, guilty of transmitting the germs of diseases to their human host while supping on his blood. They have been caught in the act of infecting man and "caught with the goods on them" in the shape of colonies of disease germs, breeding in their stomachs or salivary glands. The list of them is given in the accompanying table

The insects which suck blood and deliver these stabs in the dark are known as the active carriers of disease. The mosquito which transmits malaria and the variety which carries yellow fever are good examples of active carriers, as the germs multiply and remain in their bodies. There are insects which do not prey on man, but mechanically transmit disease germs by breeding or feeding on filth and then frequenting the pantry, dairy or mess room where food supplies are exposed. The house fly is the most noted member of this passive class of carriers, though cockroaches or any small domestic vermin may act in that capacity.

The common housefly is a passive and possibly an active carrier of disease. It was long supposed to convey the germs only by accident and was convicted of this act during the typhoid epidemic of the Spanish-American War, for flies whitened by lime from the latrines were seen on the food in the mess tents. The investigators of the London Local Government Board, however, have recently found that flies fed on infected sputum or other disease producing matter regurgitate germs from their crop when endeavoring to soften hard foods, such as sugar, on which they propose dining.

The fly was found to be not only a grave danger in medicine but a menace in surgery. The writer in 1902 conducted a series of experiments which proved that flies having access to surgical dressings in a hospital transmitted the bacillus of green pus, otherwise known as the bacillus pyocyaneus, the source of dangerous and intractable surgical infections.

The diseases in which the fly is implicated as disseminator make a considerable list:—Summer complaint, typhoid fever, cholera, surgical infections, tuberculosis, plague, anthrax, hookworm and yaws, an epidemic disease which produces a staggering, drunken gait.

The hospital superintendent and housewife should be provided with more scientific assistance in their fight against this minute, active and numberless foe, and it is possible that science has at last handed them an effective weapon. Flies are subject to a fungus disease; when infected the threads of the fungus grow through and through their bodies and they soon die. This disease usually attacks a few flies late in the Fall, when it is not uncommon to see a dead fly, furred with a whitish down, adhering to the wall or window glass, with a halo of the fungus growth raying out from the body of the glass.

Two English physicians, Dr. Edgar Hesse, of Brunswick Park, and Dr. Monckton-Copeman, of the London Local Government Board, have been investigating this fungus, which is so fatal to flies that if one fly is inoculated and set free an epidemic is spread among the flies and they die by the thousands. They have discovered how to grow the fungus on gelatine, and inoculate the flies by scratching them lightly with a needle which has been dipped in a culture of the mold. Then the flies are liberated. An epidemic results which amounts to total annihilation. The mold is harmless to man and vertebrate animals.

The fly-killing fungus appears spontaneously during the damp, cold days of Autumn, and is the solution of the old question, "Where do all the flies go?" These English investigators intend to have a full supply of the cultures on hand to inoculate the first flies of the Summer or Spring, and as the United States Government bacteriologists have ordered test tubes of the fungus for trial on the house flies of America, there is some hope that the present year will prove an unlucky one for flies

In the past ten years over 180,000 persons in New York City alone have died from diseases which it has been conclusively proven may be transmitted by flies. This is one-fifth of the total mortality in the city during that period

In the records of the Health Department the cause of death in those 180,000 cases was variously given as tuberculosis, typhoid fever and Summer complaint, but recent research warrants the assertion that none of those diseases could possibly have claimed the death-toll they did but for the activity of the ordinary house-fly.

If all the windows are tightly screened and garbage cans kept clean the fly nuisance can be largely guarded against. But the most important protective measure is to kill the early flies before they have a chance to multiply. The first flies of the Spring are those which have hibernated during the Winter in warm dark cracks and crevices. The female fly emerges from her Winter hiding place ready to lay 120 eggs in the first sufficiently filthy repository she can find. Twenty generations or more may be the off spring of one pair of flies in a single season. If all the eggs hatched and all the flies lived the possible result would be literally octillions of flies. But even such a conservative scientist as Dr. Howard calculates the actual annual average progeny of a single pair of flies at about 8,000,000 Every fly killed before the first of June is worth thousands slaughtered in July and millions in September.

Although the mosquito has been more attacked than the house-fly, it is still necessary to keep up the war on this pest. The mosquito is a walking arsenal and among its chest of tools it keeps a poisoned stiletto. The beak of the mosquito opens to view two little lances, two little saws, a hypodermic needle which may be charged with poison, and a suction pump for abstracting your blood. Of the six hundred mosquito families which are now known and identified, there are two which are notorious in America: the three anopheles cousins, which transmit the various forms of the malarial parasite, and the stegomyia calopus, which is the active carrier of yellow fever

The biting mosquito injects a small amount of its saliva into the wound it makes for the supposed purpose of protecting its own life by preventing the blood from clotting and clogging up the hollow tube through which it drinks. The hypodermic needle leads from the salivary glands and through this it pours the salivary secretion, together with a number of infectious germs into the wound.

Malaria was the curse of the frontiersmen in the development of this country. The disease was most prevalent along the rich flood valleys of the rivers and caused a high mortality. An Indiana physician told the writer that when he secured an autopsy on the body of one of the victims of that very malignant form of the disease he invariably found that the spleen was ruptured from violent congestion, but he found nothing which told him of the real cause of the disease. The disease was supposed to be occasioned by a miasm which traveled on the air of night. Quinine was the only antidote. It was sold by the ounce in the country stores, taken in doses of one teaspoonful, and sometimes kept on the table like a condiment.

Then came the recent discovery that the cause of malaria was a parasite, composed of little more than an unformed mass of protoplasm, which was transmitted from man to man by the bite of a mosquito. The malarial mosquito usually flies at night. When feeding on an infected human being, it would suck up and swallow many of the plasmodia, as the germs of malaria are called. These germs live in the red blood cells.

Dr. Ross, an Englishman, after five years work, was able to demonstrate that fertilization of the malarial germs took place in the stomach of the mosquito, with the formation of an enormous number of daughter germs. When conjugation of the male and female element of the plasmodium took place, a cyst formed, from which later as many as 10,000 of the daughter germs were released, to pour down the ducts of the salivary glands of the mosquito, and be injected into the blood of the next man bitten.

Just lately it has been found by Italian investigators that the insectivorous bat is also a carrier of the malaria germ, an unpleasant sequel of its favorite diet, the mosquito. One stage of the life cycle of the germ is said to take place in the bat.

What the Stars Predict for Us in M

O[illegible] of the most difficult problems that has ever been presented to the citizens of the United States to solve is the present [illegible] Mexico. No man, from the shrewdest expert on war tactics and methods, down to the humblest citizen, can say for a certainty just how and when this "affair of honor" will end.

[illegible] are numberless opinions which at present [illegible] only be regarded in the light of plausi[illegible] any one of which may be accurate. N[illegible] the main cause of the differences of o[illegible] in the fact that the tendency toward [illegible] ion and inconsistency seems to be, and [illegible] very marked in the conduct and management of the trouble by some of the officials at the Capitol in Washington, D. C.

Talk about a "three years' bloody siege" is not borne out by the testimony of the stars, and the "ifs" and "whys" and "I told you so," etc., etc., can have no place or consideration in the premises.

As a basis for planetary deductions we have two very remarkable and important events, viz.: First, the invasion of Vera Cruz, on the 21st of April, at 12:20 o'clock, noon (Mexico time), by sailors and marines from the United States battleships.

Second, the adoption of war resolutions by the Senate, in session assembled, on the morning of April 22, at 3:21 o'clock, Washington (D. C.) time And add to these the important fact that the Mexicans fired the first shot.

We have not forgotten that old axiom, "Whoever fires the first shot loses the battle." So far, in the wars of history, this axiom has held good. And it will hold good in the present crisis also The United States will win, but it will not take them three years, nor even two years, to accomplish it.

Many dangers that are feared in connection with the campaign in Mexico, especially those relating to sickness, yellow fever, etc., are denied by the stars

Now, let us see just what the positions of the planets upon the invasion of Vera Cruz foretell, from an astrological viewpoint.

Mercury and the Sun in the ninth division are very significant in more than one respect, viz.:

1 Mercury shows a desire on the part of the President to be too generous and lenient in dealing with the common enemy, and also a tendency to unnecessary reasoning. The Sun shows him to be too ambitious, but never able to realize the full extent of his most cherished desires—without great risk to his own welfare and prestige—as his power to overcome obstacles and difficulties of political import is weak. Danger of incurring the anger and loss of his most intimate friends is also indicated.

2. Saturn, in the eleventh division, in evil square to the moon, suggests a warped mind, very feeble in presence of real danger; fearful, covetous and changeable in opinion, lacking in zeal. It also indicates no hope or chance for peace.

3. Uranus, in the seventh division, is a certain indication of war. Jupiter, also there, will modify somewhat the chances and danger of conflict. But, then, Jupiter is in Aquarius, the domain of Uranus, hence his power for good will not last. His Square aspect to Venus denotes scandal, disgrace, loss of public confidence to the extent that hostilities will be forced to a head despite the influence and power of peace advocates. July 1 will bring about startling developments.

4. Cauda, "The Dragon's Tail," in the second division, is an irrefutable indication of misuse of funds—or, in other words, to put it plainly, graft.

5. Mars and Neptune in conjunction, in the twelfth division (house of imprisonment), signify imprisonment to Carranza or Villa, or both; while the moon, in the eighth (the house areas and seaport towns of the tropics. It may, however invade the temperate zone during the Summer months of a favorable season. The disease has been a fixed institution in the West Indies and Central America since their discovery and has frequently invaded the Gulf States. An epidemic of yellow fever in New Orleans in 1905 totalled 8,000 cases and 900 deaths.

The yellow fever mosquito differs from most varieties by its habit of flying in the day time. It is quite domesticated, frequenting human habitations by preference, and only leaving the house when seeking an opportunity to deposit its eggs. The eggs are deposited in standing water, where development takes place through the larval and wiggler stage. When the adult stage is reached the mature insect again seeks the home of its regular food—man. Small and irregular forms of this variety of mosquito appear, which are able to pass between the meshes of the usual wire screen.

When the mosquito draws blood from a victim of yellow fever, it also draws the germs of the disease with the blood. These germs remain in the mosquito and undergo a developmental cycle. About three weeks after such an infective feed the mosquito is able to transmit the disease in a virulent form.

Finlay, of Havana, announced in 1881 that yellow fever was transmitted by bloodsucking insects,' the mosquito and others. This enormously important statement was ignored for twenty years. Several of the measures employed in the cleaning up of Havana Harbor, and the Canal Zone, such as the fumigation of vessels and infected houses and the isolation of all cases of the disease, would serve to eliminate the bedbug as well as the mosquito, and it is possible that one insect is as guilty as the other in the transmission of the disease.

Since Tom Sawyer carried woodticks to school in a pill box in Missouri, the whole vast business of cattle breeding in the Southwest has been developed. It was the herding of Southern cattle in Northern pastures that called attention to the epidemic character of Texas fever, which is transmitted by the same little wood ticks Tom Sawyer rolled on his desk that Summer day.

The adult tick, when hanging from the flanks of cattle, looks like a large black shoe button. It is wholly parasitic, and feeds by thrusting its sucking beak into the skin of the host, where it is held in place by the strong recurved teeth. The eggs of the female tick number into the thousands, and are infected with the germs of the disease the mother may have acquired. The female drops from her host to the ground to deposit her eggs. The seed ticks when they hatch, climb to the outmost twigs of shrubbery, along a path traversed by animal or man, ready to catch on with dexterity.

All Southern cattle contract Texas fever in a mild form and remain carriers of the disease. When stock herders began driving cattle to more Northern feeding ranges, a very fatal epidemic attacked the native cattle which fed in the same pastures or passed along the same roads. The annual losses due to the ravages of this disease mounted up to $100,000,000. When it was found that the disease was transmitted by the tick, various methods were used to obviate the infection of the non-immune cattle, such as dipping, and a rotation of pastures, and the epidemic is now held in check.

Rocky Mountain spotted fever is an epidemic disease of small wild animals which is transmitted to domestic animals and man by the Rocky Mountain tick. The fever may be transmitted to man in any region where this species of tick is present if the disease is once introduced into a locality by a tick from an infected region, or by man or some other animal susceptible to the malady. The fever, when it attacks man, attains serious form, the mortality in the Bitter Root Valley of Montana having reached 70 to 80 per cent. The United States Bureau of Entomology recently conducted a study of the distribution of the tick, and found its range to extend throughout the Rockies at various elevations, from 500 to 9,000 feet above sea level. It was while investigating this disease that Dr. Howard Rickett contracted it and lost his life.

The itch mite, which lives in burrows excavated through the skin of man, is the cause of the disorder known as seven-year-itch. The mite is a six legged creature just perceptible to the naked eye. It is the frequent cause of epidemics of running sores, which occur on the faces of small children, for it carries the pus germs which cause festers as it migrates from one member of the group to another. A very much more serious charge is, however, brought against it. Dr. Mugliston, an English physician, during the investigation of seventy-seven cases of leprosy, became convinced that the itch mite was the active agent in spreading this loathesome disease.

Lice are commonly found on the persons of the uncleanly and the heads of the neglected sick. They are a common parasite among those members of the submerged tenth, who frequent night shelters and stagger into the examining wards of great city hospitals in Winter, dying from exposure and malnutrition. Typhus or ship fever, which is itself a disease of the ill-nourished and unsanitary and remains endemic in the stews of great cities, is transmitted by this bloodsucking vermin.

It was Dr Howard Rickett and his confrere, Dr. Wilder, who discovered the guilt of these vermin in the transmission of typhus fever when they were jointly engaged in the investigation of Mexican typhus, which is a form of the disease very nearly identical with the classic disease.

The relapsing fever of Africa is transmitted by this vermin as well as by the African tick. This disease is not to be confused with the African tick fever which is yet another unpleasant epidemic disease known to be carried from man to man by an insect.

Surra is one of those tropical diseases which are terribly fatal to animals, and may attack human beings. It is well known in Asia and the Philippines, and is supposed to be identical with the epidemic disease called "nagana" of Central Africa. It attacks with great impartiality and a high mortality the horse, mule, camel, elephant and dog. Dr. Musgrove, who has been at work studying the transmission of the disease in the Philippines, considers that it may be transmitted by the bite of any one of the following blood sucking insects: lice, ticks, fleas, mosquitos and biting flies.

Bubonic plague is that terrible epidemic disease which ravaged Europe in the Seventeenth Century, and was known as the black death. It occurs most commonly as an infection of the lymphatic glands, which swell up, and are known as buboes. From this form of the disease comes the modern name. The uncommon form of the disease is an infection of the lung tissue which is usually fatal in twenty-four hours. All cases of the second form die, and the mortality of all forms of the disease is high. As, according to very high authority, "bubonic plague is now going around the world," every man, woman and child should know by what agencies it is transmitted, and do their part in preventing its invasion of our country.

The victim of bubonic plague, whether he be man or rat, develops the germs of the disease bacillus pestis, in incredible numbers which pour into his blood for eighteen to thirty-six hours preceding his death. Insects leave the dying subject, their stomachs filled with bad blood and deadly germs, and transmit the germs to any person bitten during the next several days.

When it was observed that a great mortality occurred among rats during an epidemic of bubonic, a careful study was made of the rat parasites, and it was proved that fleas fed on rats dying of the plague could transmit the disease to guinea pigs. It was then proved that the fleas could transmit the plague from rat to man.

The defense of our country from invasion by bubonic plague is based on taking care that rats and their fleas on ships coming from infected ports shall not reach land.

Professor Verjbitski, the celebrated Russian pathologist, has recently proved that the bedbug transmits plague even more readily than the flea.

The biting flies are very dangerous insect pests. There is the tsetse fly, whose buzz is the fatal lullaby to the African sleeping sickness. This disease is said to have been the first one on [illegible] was clearly recognized [illegible] borne. It is a disease [illegible] antelope and wild pig and [illegible] other wild animals, and [illegible] to man by the bite of a [illegible] many of whose first cousins live in North America. Dr Bruce, who discovered the blood parasite of sleeping sickness in the tsetse fly, believed this insect to be dangerous for only a day or so after the infective feed. It is now known that it takes three weeks for the organism to develop to the infective stage after feeding, but the fly is then a permanent carrier of the disease for life. There are two important lessons for Americans to learn from this disease: the first is that as we have a tsetse fly of our own ready to spread the disease, no case of sleeping sickness should ever be allowed to gain entrance to this country. The second is that no case of obscure disease should be transported to an immune section of the country, even for the purposes of study. The student should travel to the disease.

The sand fly is a name given to several different biting flies or gnats in different parts of the world. Dr Doerr found that the so-called sand fly of the tropics, phlobotomus, was the agent of transmission of dengue, or breakbone fever. This disease is called breakbone from the terrible pains felt in all the bones during the acute stage.

Another sand fly, simulium reptans, is said to transmit both pellagra and the pappataci fever of Italy. Pappataci fever was long considered a chronic [illegible] malaria; it is now believed to be due to another germ. The disease is a grave one, especially fatal to children.

The sand fly transmission of pellagra, an epidemic disease of the nervous system with wasting and extensive skin eruptions, has been recently investigated by Dr Hunter, of the Entomological Department of Kansas University. The sand fly, simulium vittatum, which abound on the shores of Turkey Creek and other Kansas waters, is believed to carry this disease.

The buffalo gnat, a black biting fly, which abounds in the Middle West, came into prominence two years ago when the physicians of Council Bluffs, Iowa, showed that its prevalence coincided with the appearance of epidemic paralysis. Recent proof of the guilt of the biting stable fly in the transmission of this disease gives undoubted weight to their theory.

Although not a biter, the gray fly, known as the screw worm fly, has proved such a terrible enemy of mankind that it is included in the black list. This fly deposits its eggs preferably in open wounds of man or animals. It is said to be attracted by any odorous discharge, and it is perhaps for this reason that the fly has not infrequently deposited its eggs in the ears or nostrils of children or adults asleep in the open. The larvae, when hatched, burrow directly into the tissues, eating as they go, and cause the most intense agony, or even death if not dislodged.

The 300,000 Eggs Laid by a Single Tick That Has Been Proved to Transmit Four Diseases and Probably Others.

At the recent International Congress of Hygiene held in Washington, D. C., it was announced that Drs. Rosanau, Shepperd Brues and Richardson, of Massachusetts, had proved that the biting stable fly transmits the germ that causes acute infantile paralysis.

Biting flies, bred for the purpose, were allowed to feed on monkeys infected with human infantile paralysis and subsequently on normal monkeys, which thereupon contracted the disease.

The biting stable fly, stomoxys calcifrans, is commonly found about horses, but has the habit of entering houses before a rain. It looks much like the common house fly and its habits have given rise to the saying that flies begin to bite before it rains. Poliomyelitis, the scientific name of the acute epidemic paralysis which has been so widespread in this country for six years, is a blood borne disease. It is also an epidemic disease of domestic animals, notably the horse. It now appears probable that the biting stable fly is the active agent in transmitting poliomyelitis from horse to man. Dr J. V. V. Manning has announced in recent medical journals the conclusion that the bedbug, a common blood-sucking parasite of man, is the usual agent of transmission of poliomyelitis from man to man.

The doctor, at a certain stage of the search for the method of transmission of the disease, found it necessary to investigate the habits of the bedbug. The conclusions reached are summarized as follows:

"A bedbug, making an evening meal from the blood of a child in the stage of onset of infantile paralysis, and a morning meal on the blood of a healthy child asleep in the same bed, would transmit the organism of the disease to the healthy child.

"If the second meal of the bedbug was deferred for two or more weeks, during which the bug had been transported to some other environment, the germs of the disease would still be transmitted to the first person on which the bedbug fed.'

It is now declared by Dr. Manning that the bedbug carries the greatest number of diseases, although the house fly causes the greatest loss of life in this country. The latest medical research has convicted the bedbug of transmitting bubonic plague; kala azar, the terrible dumdum fever of South India; tuberculosis; leprosy and beri beri.

Recent medical reports stated that epidemics of beri beri in the jail and native police quarters of Shanghai were checked as soon as the buildings were freed from the bugs.

A study of the table which accompanies this article will reveal the fact that every insect known to transmit one blood borne disease also transmits other diseases; that every blood borne disease which has been found to be carried by a blood sucking parasite is known to be transmitted by more than one such agent.

These facts prove that the destruction, or at least the control, of insect pests is necessary for the suppression of epidemic diseases.

Had Mr. Wilson or any member of his Cabinet consulted an astrologer after the Senate had adopted its war resolutions, he would have learned in a very short time what might take him months to find out, and that is, at the very moment the vote by the Senate came to a close, from that moment the Huerta regime in Mexico was doomed to end.

This is shown by the one most striking and remarkable feature in the second horoscope, which is the position of Saturn in the fourth house—the end of all things. Saturn is the ruling planet of Capricorn. Capricorn rules Mexico. Saturn is in the sign Gemini. Gemini rules the United States, and its ruling planet, Mercury, is in the first house, rising in splendor and glory with the moon and "Leonis," both fortunate. Hence, a schoolboy could very readily grasp the significance of this—which means the overthrow of the Mexican Government by the United States.

Uranus, in the twelfth, denotes the arrest and trial by court-martial of Victoriano Huerta—and, if he should escape execution, a violent death awaits him in any case. Neptune and Mars, in the fifth division, denote the death and massacre of women and children.

The "Dragon's Tail"—Cauda—in the seventh house, is a sure sign of war, but of short duration. The evil aspect of Saturn further indicates that Huerta's troops will be slaughtered meeting with fire on all sides, aerial as well as earthly. But to sum up:

In the first horoscope the ruling sign of Japan is on the cusp of the third division. Venus, its ruler, is in the mid-heaven, division 10, in conjunction with the "Part of Fortune." Now, this aspect in no wise suggests that Japan, as a whole, will take action against the United States. Of course, you never can tell just what the wily yellow men will do. But the Square aspect of Jupiter to Venus, and the evil Uranus in conjunction with Jupiter, suggest a warning to Japan to "keep hands off."

There will be disappointments, setbacks, errors of judgment, rejections from the Capitol of plans of battle, etc., etc., made by the commanders of the invading forces; a split and a genuine riot in the Cabinet, and grave danger of impeachment to the President through the treachery of false friends.

But not until Saturn leaves the ruling sign of the United States (Gemini) will the present difficulties in Mexico come to a final close. By July 4, 1915, the United States will be in full control of affairs in the government of Mexico.

HOW NORDICA'S "RESTLESS PEARL" WON ITS WAY HOME

The Strange Story of the Famous Singer's "Homesick" Gem, Its Curious Influence on Her Career, and the Tragedy That at Last Ended Its Wanderings

WHILE the body of Mme. Lillian Nordica, the greatest American prima donna, is making its way to her native country for burial a strange story precedes it. Since her lonely death at Batavia, Java, the story became current in the Dutch town in the South Seas and, passing from lip to lip, has arrived in New York. It is a tale of mystery and its chief figure is a restless yellow pearl!

The prima donna loved jewels. When she died it was found that she had collected a round million dollars' worth of them. In her collection pearls were her favorites. The costliest and mose beautiful object in her jewel box was a three-strand necklace of creamy pearls whose value is $105 000. Another and smaller necklace was of pearls, but held in the light they flung out blueish rays. The greatest Brunhilde preferred the rich shades of the larger and more valuable necklace. It was her wont to hold these favorites of hers in the sunlight or in the strong light and exclaim: "Look at the yellow beauties!"

The singer, like Calve, loved yellow. It was the color of sunshine. It seemed to her to hold charm of life, to hold and reflect it. And that was why, according to the strange story, she bought the pearl in which this story centres.

It was a yellow pearl and was her first great jewel. She bought it in the early jewelless days while she was studying in Paris and while the world of music was waiting to be conquered by her.

It lay in a jeweler's window in the Latin quarter, displayed at an absurdly low price. Passing the shop with another music student she saw it, lingered and admired it. Against her will it lured her within the shop. She asked to see it, and the jeweler placed it in her hand.

"Look," she said. "it is like a great yellow eye! How can you sell anything so beautiful at that ridiculous price?"

The French shopkeeper shrugged his expressive shoulders. "It is the absurd, the ignorant superstition, mademoiselle. It has it that this pearl brings to its owner success, but with it many tears and much unrest. But of those La Belle American need not be afraid."

"Will it bring failure?" Lillian Norton—for that was Nordica's name—laid the pearl upon the counter and gazed at it with mingled admiration and misgivings.

"But no, mademoiselle! On the contrary, I have it from the man who sold it to me that the person who owns it will have the great success. He will grow rich and famous, but the tears and the unrest—he said he was not happy in the home. He was marrying, he said, his third wife. The others he said have parted from him in the life. He was about to marry the third and he would not have in the home a disturber. He sold me the pearl for a little less than I offer it to you, a very little less. Mademoiselle."

"It's like Balzac's 'Peau de Chagrin,' isn't it? But I'm not superstitious," said the young American. "I have no husband. I have only my ambition, and if this does disturb them I shall not care."

"He is only restless, Mademoiselle," reiterated the shopkeeper. "He have come from the waters of Java. The natives say the deep yellow pearl is ever homesick for its native waters. It will never let its owner rest until it is back at home."

"Some day," said the singer, "I may restore him to his native waters."

"Just where did the pearl come from?"

"From one of the atolls in the Gulf of Borneo, madame. We have traced its history. I warn madame that it is superstition but it is not happy."

The singer laughed.

Hitherto Lillian Norton's life had been one of poverty, of hard work, of grim determination and unflagging resolve. But she overflowed with Yankee grit. Born on a farm in Maine, the granddaughter of Camp meeting John, a revivalist whose resonant notes shook woods or shores where he camped and sang of a Summer; a shopgirl in Boston until she was discovered by a vocal teacher who heard her singing as she re-arranged the goods on the counter; too poor to rent a piano, practicing with the aid of a pitch pipe for two years; three years of barnstorming concert work, these had been her experience when she came to Paris to study and fell in with the restless pearl. But her face was turned to the East. In her soul was an unconquerable resolve.

Yet from the moment of her purchase of "the restless pearl" troubles beset her. She made her debut in a village in northern Italy and the Italians groaned at her. Bruised but not beaten she returned to Boston. Boston refrained from hisses, but not from severe criticism. To new York she went and sang in the Academy of Music. New Yorkers were a shade kinder, but they, too, lacked enthusiasm. It was far from a triumphal entry into her own country.

To Europe she returned, taking a new name to hide the old defeats. No longer was she Lillie Norton. She had become Lillian Nordica.

To Paris came Fred Gower. Gower was a young American whom Professor Bell had sent to France to introduce his telephones. A countryman told him of the struggles of a beautiful and talented young American and her mother to keep their brave heads above the waters of debt and penury while the daughter strove for grudging recognition from the arbiters of musical destinies in Europe. Fred Gower met the Widow Norton and her daughter and with the daughter he fell in love in the rash, headstrong way of his temperament.

They were married. Soon they discovered themselves to be unhappy. Friends of both diagnosed the case as one of hopeless incompatibility. The artistic temperament and the bent of the inventor and promoter formed a clashing discord. The discord rent the nerves of the singer. It set the temper of the inventor and promoter out of tune. There was a rumor of continued differences of a possible separation. But chance or fate strangely intervened.

Fred Gower was an amateur balloonist. He had made several successful journeys in the upper airs. In one of these he had crossed the English Channel. Yet from the tour of the upper currents conceived and carried out at this time he never returned. The collapsed balloon was found floating in the channel.

But as though the oracle of the restless pearl had spoken truly triumph came soon after for the singer. She was permitted to sing at Bayreuth. She was the first of the American prima donnas to be permitted the honor. The Germans applauded her. With the stamp of German recognition upon her she went to England and sang at Covent Garden. Again success! She went to St. Petersburg and sang for the royal family. Among the million dollars worth of jewels is a bracelet presented [illegible] by the Czar. In New York, where she had been coldly received, a furore greeted her. In Boston fortune turned a full faced smile upon her.

Still, according to the story of the restless pearl, homesick for its South Sea waters, there must be tears. They came. They followed closely upon her marriage to Zoltan Doehme, an Hungarian tenor, whom the critics appraised as "a man of moderate vocal ability, but of undoubted grace of person." Again discord. Alienation, silence, the invocation of the law. By successive steps the pair descended from the heights of happiness.

Zoltan Doehme was a teacher as well as a singer. Geraldine Farrar was one of these who benefited by his instruction and criticism. When separation came she aligned herself with her friend, Mme Nordica, rather than her master. Divorce followed upon eight years of the prima donna's second marriage.

During this time of slow severance of the bonds that had been forged in love, Mme Nordica gave her confidence to Frau Wagner's shoulder. The widow of the German composer patted the proud head bowed upon her shoulder.

"Tears," said the widow of Wagner. "Lieber Himmel. Es ist immer dos selbe. You are like Wagner. You are a genius. He was a genius. And genius is always lonely, always dissatisfied. Their souls never rest."

There followed a period in which Mme Nordica's energies were focussed solely upon her art. Fame followed her glorious voice, and artistic appreciation, but not always—indeed not often—peace.

Twice she severed her connection with the Metropolitan Opera House management. She appeared under the direction of various managers in opera. She made long concert tours.

Five years ago she took a third husband. He was George W Young, a banker, who had a short time previously been divorced. Nor had the courtship been a calm one. Again there were tears and unrest. The former Mrs Young lent the element of turbulence.

After her third marriage the prima donna became interested in a method of reduction that was in vogue in France. She introduced it in America. Her own figure became girlish through the treatment. And perhaps her power of resistance was lessened.

Her last marriage [illegible] seemed to be a haven [illegible] of the great [illegible] home crowned [illegible] on the Hudson, overlooking [illegible] almost within sight of Harmon, where her dream, a Bayreuth of America, was beginning to become a realization. Often standing on the veranda, her splendid eyes sweeping the soothing scene, she said: "I have come to the Peaceful Valley of my life." It is pleasant to think of the diva at this time, to linger upon this tender phase of her turbulent existence.

Her assets were a husband to whom she was devoted and of whom she was intensely proud, a home that was a place of peace, fame that had spread [illegible] the civilized world, and the glittering mass of her million dollars worth of jewels.

Mme Nordica's jewels according to careful appraisement of their value were:

1 three-strand pearl necklace of [illegible] pearls	$150 000
1 [illegible] necklace of blue [illegible]	100 000
1 [illegible] of graduated [illegible] alternating with diamonds [illegible] pear-shaped [illegible] pendant	400 000
[illegible] of graduated [illegible] stones	125,000
Earrings to [illegible] necklace	10,000
[illegible] and [illegible] emeralds	110,000
[illegible] pieces and [illegible] stones including a curious deeply yellow pearl....	5,000
	$1 000 000

But behold according to the story that comes from far away Batavia, the influence of the "restless pearl." Restless itself, it begat restlessness in its possessor. Not content with her triumphs, Mme Nordica conceived the plan of a round-the-world tour. She would girdle the world with song, she said, then spend the remainder of her years in her peaceful valley.

Seven months ago she began her world tour. Christmas she spent aboard the vessel Tasman. Three days later in a terrific storm the vessel went ashore in the Gulf of Papua—near an atoll where pearl fishers dived! When the prima donna was rescued her nerves of steel were broken. She wept as a babe that would not be comforted. Weakened by fright and exposure to the elements, she yielded first to nervous prostration, then to pneumonia. A Dutch physician combatted her desire to continue her journey.

"But I shall go mad if I wait here," she cried, and against his protest sailed for Batavia. There, during three weeks she seemed to regain her lost strength. Her nerves of steel were returning. But a relapse occurred. On May tenth she died on a stormy night far from her peaceful valley.

When an inventory of her belongings was taken before the body started its long homeward journey, May 17, most of the million dollars worth of jewels were found. But the yellow pearl was missing.

Those who accompanied her and who had been at her bedside at Thursday Island, remembered seeing it. It had lain on the stand beside her bed. Its rich color she said comforted and cheered her. It had been among her effects when she sailed for Batavia. But when the life force passed from the majestic Brunhilde, the yellow pearl vanished.

Was it stolen by a pilfering servant? Had some unguessed power replaced it in its native waters?

Whatever it may be—according to the Batavian legend the restless pearl is at last, like its owner, at rest. Homesick, it had found its home.

Why I Believe Plants Are Intelligent

By MAURICE MAETERLINCK.

GATHER, if you will, from the side of the path, in the very first tuft that you see, a blade of any grass, and you will find at work a little independent, untiring, unexpected intelligence. Here are two poor little creeping plants that you have seen a thousand times on your walks, for they are found everywhere, even in the tiniest crannies into which a bit of dust has been blown. They are two varieties of wild lucern, two bad weeds in the most modest sense of the word.

One bears a red blossom, the other a yellow crest the size of a pea. When you see them among the other plants, you would hardly think that they, long before the illustrious geometrician and physician of Syracuse had discovered and tried to apply, not to the raising of liquids, but to aviation, the astonishing properties of the power of Archimedes. They place their seeds in light spiral envelopes, with three or four turns, admirably constructed, when figuring upon their falling and being picked up by the wind, to be whirled a long distance in the air.

One of these, the yellow one, has even improved upon the apparatus of the red one, by furnishing the edges of the spiral with a double row of points, with the plain intention of attaching itself to any passer-by, by the clothing of humans, or the hair and wool of animals. It is clear that it hopes to enjoy the advantages of the aeronaut—that is, to scatter its seeds by aid of the sheep, rabbits, etc., thus going even further than those taken up by the air.

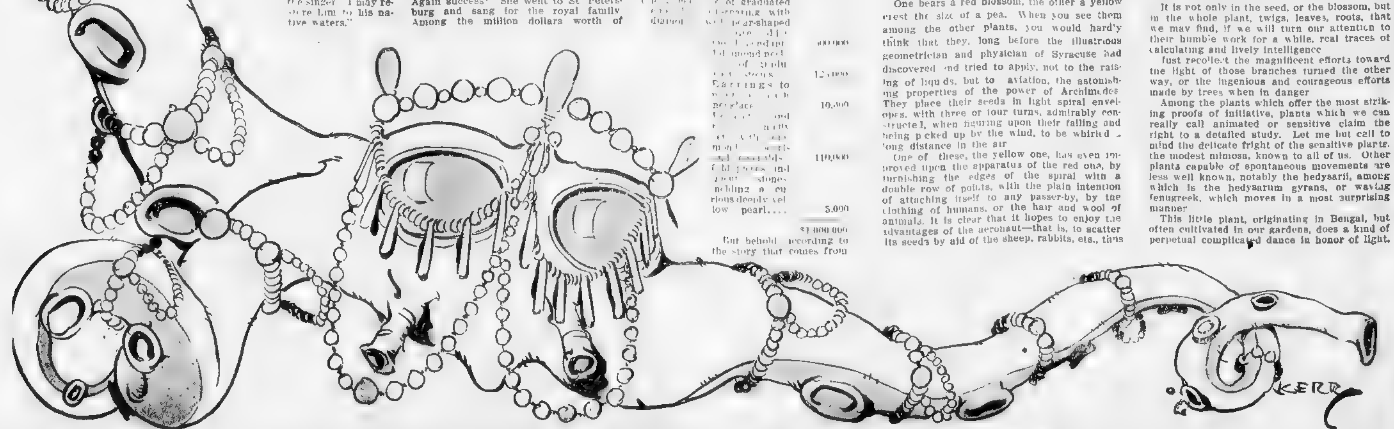
The most touching part of all this great effort is that it is useless. The poor red and yellow lucerns have deceived themselves. Their remarkable power will do them no good. They cannot act unless they fall from a certain distance, from the height of a tall tree; but, dropping amid the grass, they fail to germinate. Here we have a curious instance of the errors, disappointments, experiments and little mishaps, occurring so often in nature, for we need study very little to know that nature never makes a mistake.

It is not only in the seed, or the blossom, but in the whole plant, twigs, leaves, roots, that we may find, if we will turn our attention to their humble work for a while, real traces of calculating and lively intelligence.

Just recollect the magnificent efforts toward the light of those branches turned the other way, or the ingenious and courageous efforts made by trees when in danger.

Among the plants which offer the most striking proofs of initiative, plants which we can really call animated or sensitive claim the right to a detailed study. Let me but call to mind the delicate fright of the sensitive plants, the modest mimosa, known to all of us. Other plants capable of spontaneous movements are less well known, notably the hedysarii, among which is the hedysarum gyrans, or waving fenugreek, which moves in a most surprising manner.

This little plant, originating in Bengal, but often cultivated in our gardens, does a kind of perpetual complicated dance in honor of light.



"It was as though some monstrous god of jewels heerd the prayer of the yellow pearl, reached up an arm and wrecked the ship that held the gem."

How We Got Our KNIVES, FORKS and SPOONS

Curing Man of the Habit of EATING WITH HIS FINGERS Was a Long, Slow Process

THE knife with which you cut your meat to-day is the result of a slow development from the most remote ages. The human race cannot long have isted before necessity prompted the use of a rude tting instrument with which game might be killed d then divided.

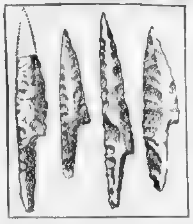
The knife was chipped out of flint or stone, although iginally such instruments may not have been fashed at all beyond the rude shape that nature gave em. Sometimes they were made from shell or the nes of animals or sharpened pieces of tough wood.

For ages the same implement served indiscriminately the field of battle, in the chase, and at meals. Finally it took different shapes, according to the use to ich it was to be put. A curved blade was used for utting, a straight one for domestic purposes, and a nted or dagger-shaped knife served as a weapon.

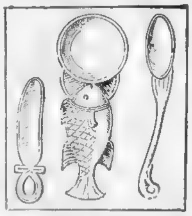
When history opens, men are already using knives of pper. Somewhat later tin was added to the copper, d bronze instruments resulted. Bronze continued in for until the time of Caesar, but iron had come into e a thousand years before. The steel of Damascus dually took their places.

In literature the earliest use of the knife has reference to its use in the sacrifice. We are familiar with e reference in Genesis: "And Abraham stretched th his hand and took the knife to slay his son."

The Greek word knife is derived from [illegible] eans fight, and refers to a large knife worn by heroes d used by them for slaughtering animals. Since the eeks were in the habit of feasting on their [illegible] e can hardly imagine that this knife would often be ed in carving meat. In the works of Herodotus we ve reference to its use as a carving knife. There at [illegible] a comic poet who flourished about the same time, [illegible] knife for cutting meat on one's plate.



Man's First Knives—Crude Implements of Flint, Dating from the Old Stone Age.



Ancient Egyptian Spoons. The One on the Left Is of Gray-Green Slate; the Other Two of Carved Wood.

At the beginning of the Christian era table knives were still without favor. That they were used to a limited extent is indicated by the fact that ivory-handled knives were found in the Roman tombs besides dishes of food. There are certain [illegible] depicting banquet scenes, at which the guests were provided with knives, but ordinarily the food was cut before being placed upon the table. We learn from Clement of Alexandria that by the second half of the second century the use of knives at table had become common in the Roman Empire.

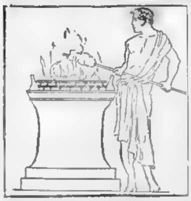
But certain it is that until the fourteenth century the table knife did not appear in a class by itself. Up to that time the guest attending a dinner party provided his own, or, if he failed to do so, used his fingers. Within another century, however, the table knife became so popular that three distinct kinds of knives were manufactured—a small knife used in eating, a carved knife with a broad blade, and the parepain, or bread-peeler, designed to trim the crusts from flat pieces of bread, which were often used instead of plates.

During the first half of the seventeenth century Cardinal Richelieu, the founder of the French Academy, became offended by the rude manner in which pointed knives were used, and thereafter caused his knives to be rounded. Before long the fashion was generally adopted and the pointed blade, which, in lieu of a fork, had been useful in picking up pieces of meat, was abandoned. Since the seventeenth century the form of table knife has remained substantially as we know it.

There can be little doubt that the spoon has come down to us from remote antiquity, and that prehistoric man must have felt the need for it as soon as he discovered the use of a knife. The Greek name for spoon is derived from a word meaning shell, which would suggest that the shells of mollusks and oysters were the first spoons used. Later bone and wood were undoubtedly utilized. There are in existence ancient Egyptian spoons of glass, stone, marble, wood and ivory, curiously wrought.

The spoon made its appearance on the table long before the table knife was known. Even in the Old Testament may be found various references to golden spoons used in connection with the sacrifice. Among the early Greeks, with whom soup and porridge were popular dishes, pieces of bread at first served reasonably well as spoons, but since table knives were not in fashion, since oysters, snails and eggs appeared on every banquet table, metal utensils became an actual necessity. These were often made of gold, and the bowl although it terminated in a point, was broad and hollow. Thus the pointed end could be used in opening foods served in the shell, whereas the bowl was adapted to the eating of liquid food.

The Romans, like the Greeks, used spoons of silver, bronze or ivory to convey to the mouth what the fingers could not manage. Two kinds seem to have been in general use, the ligula and the cochlear. The ligula was shaped much like our own tablespoon. The cochlear had a much smaller bowl, was circular in shape, and very slightly hollowed. Its handle was pointed for convenience in removing oysters from the shell, and in lifting food to the mouth, and it really combined the functions of knife, fork and spoon.



The Early Greeks Used a Long Pointed Stick Called an Obelus to Support the Meat While Roasting.

The carvings and the decorations on spoons of various periods reflect the interests and the beliefs of the people who used them. Both Greek and Roman spoons have figures of the gods carved upon them. The early Christians crowded the handles, and even the bowls, with symbolic characters.

From the later Middle Ages spoons of silver washed over with gold and set with rubies, spoons of pure gold, with four pearls set in the broadest part of the handle, have come down to us. For such workmanship kings and nobles paid the goldsmiths vast sums. Those who were not wealthy used spoons of pewter, brass and tinned iron. Even wood and bone were used until late in the sixteenth century. From the thirteenth century on, however, a limited number of silver spoons were common, even in the less pretentious households.

During the seventeenth century the bowl of the spoon gradually became wider near the stem and narrower at the base, thus assuming an egg shape form, with the small end downward. It was not until after 1660 that the stem, which had been as great in thickness as in width, became flattened, gradually widened from the bowl upward, and rounded off at the top.

Spoons of standard sizes, which are familiar to us, have not long been in general use. The teaspoon, for example, is of comparatively recent introduction, for tea itself seems not to have been imported into Europe until the seventeenth century.

A sharp piece of flint naturally suggested itself to prehistoric man as a cutting implement, an oyster shell served his purpose as a spoon or ladle. It required no little skill to fashion a forked implement, however, and there was little in nature to suggest the idea. For this reason we may be sure that the fork is of far more recent origin than either the knife or the spoon.

The Egyptians used bronze forks in lifting sacrificial offerings out of seething pots, and such implements have been found in Egyptian tombs. Among the Greeks and Romans the sacrificial fork usually had five prongs, and was used in roasting pieces of meat over the fire. More often, however, a long, pointed stick, called an obelus, was used for supporting the meat.

Strangely enough, the obvious use of forks for table purposes seems not to have occurred to mankind until a comparatively modern date. If forks had been used, there would surely be some surviving relics, pictures of them in banquet scenes, or references in contemporary literature. On the other hand, in Homer and Ovid there are distinct references to the use of the fingers in conveying food to the mouth; and we are all familiar with a reference in the account of the Last Supper.

Many assert that our table fork is descended from the same ancestors as that of the Chinese chopstick. The chopstick resembles a tapering pencil in appearance; it would seem not to be a more convenient utensil than the Roman spoon, the handle of which was sometimes used in eating bits of meat or fish. Whatever its origin, the instrument first used in Italy assumed the form of a two-pronged fork, like the fork in a carving set of the present day.

Humanity waited long for the fork, yet was loth to adopt the improvement after it had been introduced. In representations of feasts previous to the sixteenth century, forks are rarely shown. During the earlier Middle Ages, we are told, they were used for roasting meat over the fire, and not for table purposes.

Franklin assures us that the use of forks did not begin to be introduced in the high society of France until 1600, that during the seventeenth century most persons ate with their fingers, and that not until the eighteenth century were forks used regularly by all classes of society.

After the middle of the seventeenth century, the history of the fork chiefly concerns its spread from the aristocracy to the more humble circles. Even during the eighteenth century it was customary for a gentleman, when traveling, to carry a case containing his own knife and fork, since the inns and public places had but a meager supply. For centuries the two-pronged instrument, bedecked with jewels and inlaid decorations prevailed. This type gradually gave way to simpler forms that enabled the fork to come into more general use. Even the first steel forks made at Sheffield, England, had only two tines, but by and by a three-pronged fork made its appearance.

The four-pronged fork, conveniently curved and adapted to the purpose for which it is used, is of comparatively recent origin. It is said that only two of those in existence are known to date from the seventeenth century.

LADY DUFF-GORDON, the famous "Lucile" of London, and foremost creator of fashions in the world, writes each week the fashion article for this newspaper, presenting all that is newest and best in styles for well-dressed women.

Lady Duff-Gordon's Paris establishment brings her into close touch with that centre of fashion.

By Lady Duff-Gordon

TO be in Paris in June means that one must have many of the simpler modes in costumes. One must have a number of afternoon gowns, hats so numerous that a different one may be worn with each gown, and all one's accessories must be in perfect harmony with one's costumes and general appearance

For instance, the parasol There are dozens of shapes to choose from, but only one or two that are permissible when milady is wearing a tailored morning costume. But I am not going to write of parasols or other accessories this week My whole mind is centred on some very lovely "trotting" dresses which I have recently made for a June bride, and I want to tell you about them

The contest between those who want the 1830 models and those who want those of 1880 is still on It wages fast and furious Neither side will give in, and the result is a wonderful mixture of "period" gowns At Auteuil the day the King and Queen of England were there the "pesage" resembled a room in which an enthusiastic but indiscriminate person had mixed Adam, Jacobean Sheraton and Louis XVI furniture Here in the "pesage" one saw bustles and Empire waists, Turkish trousers and lampshade tunics, full pleated skirts and slinky, narrow ones Even the haughtiness of the Directoire age was there, and the ugly sensoriousness of the Moyen age

Just close your eyes and think of the room I have already mentioned, and you will gather some idea of what the "royal enclosure," or "pesage," looked like?

No, my little bride did not wear any of her trotting gowns that day She was away on her honeymoon, but the memory of those costumes is so clear that I shall take pleasure in describing each one to you

Every skirt clears the ground by two or three inches Many of the "trotteurs" are being made four inches from the ground, but I do not advise this Two—or at the most three—gives the more graceful effect Then again there are some gowns which must barely escape the ground They hamper the walk—but then why walk?

These costumes I am sending this week all show a clean pair of heels to the world, and this means that the heels must be very pretty in outline and absolutely perfect in appearance The French woman may not have a pretty foot, she may not be able to buy the really wonderful shoes and slippers you make in America but never, never will she wear a shabby shoe or one that puts to shame her gown and hat

In these costumes you will notice that in every one the line of the figure is broken by one or more tunics, or as in Figure 5 by a long coat

"The Gown of the Hour" is a charming affair developed in rose silk crepe The narrow underskirt has the slit in the back and the odd sash effect which some of the mondaines especially those of a slenderness are favoring This sash is a development of the Oriental girdle, and holds in the long tunic The sleeves are of rose chiffon, and are full, being gathered in to a tight band at the wrist Even with the long tunic the waist line is distinctly outlined

With this costume the bride will wear the small, ever so chic hat which is shown here. You will notice, too, I hope, with all these trotting costumes the bride has the severest kind of parasols.

In the "Glimmer of the Sea" costume I have used a rarely beautiful shade of champagne taffeta. When the hem turns there is given just a glimpse of dull peacock satin. The two overskirts are lined with this shade, and the girdle is of peacock blue-green satin embroidered in gold and silver Again the sleeves are long and hat flower trimmed

The skirt of the "Green Meadows in June" has two overskirts, both shaped very much toward the front. The coat, with its wide, full girdle, forms the third tunic or peplum. The sleeves of this coat are not set in, although they are wrist length I have in no instance used high trimmings on any of these hats. The low, flat flower decorations are, I think, so much lovelier than the towering effects produced by feathers and ribbons.

Why Our Habits of Eating Are All Wrong.

ACCORDING to Professor Bergonie, the celebrated French authority on the nutrition of the human body the eating habits of modern civilization are all wrong. Instead of obeying the call of appetite, as we do, and as most physiologists tell us is the only reliable guide, our hours of eating should be established in conformity with hours of the day when the body energy is rising, irrespective of appetite.

In presenting to the French Academy of Medicine the results of his researches on this subject, Professor Bergonie remarked that the way we now divide our waking hours with respect to meals is deplorable We eat a light breakfast at 7:30, when the most marked rise of our energy demands the heaviest meal of the day We take a heavy luncheon at 1 o'clock and a heavy dinner at 7 or 8 which are the very hours when a sharp decline of energy should forbid us to eat at all

In the first place, rising energy is required in the performance of the digestive functions Secondly one of the principal objects of taking food is to supply the body with internal warmth, which is the same thing as energy This process begins with the act of eating, the nervous system responding—during hours of rising energy—almost immediately. Therefore the two propositions supplement each other, without any interference with that other important need of food—the repair of broken-down tissues

If we take our meals only at times of declining energy that decline is still further marked because of the very lack of energy with which to immediately assimilate nutritive material. And that, according to Professor Bergonie is exactly what is brought about by our present "deplorable" system of meals

Professor Bergonie's experiments began with a systematic study of the energy expended by man during a day of twenty-four hours. He discovered that the different states of our bodily energy are marked by the clock for the reason that the customary hours of sleep are marked in the same way During sleep the amount of energy used is at its minimum Energy accumulates during these hours At the time of rising it is reaching its maximum After rising the expenditure of energy is resumed but energy continues to rise for a few hours Shortly after rising therefore, the conditions for taking food are the most favorable of any hour of the entire twenty-four hours

The longest period of the day and night has elapsed since food was taken The stomach is empty Food is needed and there is energy wherewith to convert it into renewed energy immediately by way of the nervous system Thus Professor Bergonie appears to prove his theory that the breakfast taken shortly after rising should be the heaviest meal of the day

Now comes the argument against the heavy luncheon During the hours up to the middle of the day there is the greatest expenditure of energy The accumulation during sleep supplemented by the generous morning meal taken at the right time is becoming exhausted by noon, and by 3 o'clock is at its lowest point To eat at all during this period of energy decline would only make matters worse and a heavy meal during those hours seriously overtaxes the liver

But at a little after 3 o'clock the body energy begins to rise again and by 4 30 a light meal will help along the process But it should be only a light meal for the completion of the day's work means that there is a small proportion of energy available for digestive purposes

It appears that the very worst of our eating habits is that of taking our dinner—the heaviest meal of the day—between the hours of 7 and 8 For the day's drafts on the supply of energy have left the whole body tired, with the internal organs in no condition to convert food into energy

Toward midnight, however, the body becomes somewhat rested Another light meal can then be taken with advantage, because as very little energy is expended during sleep in other ways, there is a sufficient amount to carry on the work of digestion.

This completes the twenty-four hours' cycle, with meals taken when they will do the most good—according to the investigations of Professor Bergonie.

The French savant was careful to explain to the members of the Academy of Medicine that this arrangement of meals is not theoretical, but the result of practise by an entire family during an uninterrupted period of six years. From the viewpoint of perfect health he considered the test most convincing.

It will be noticed that these reported results are in sharp contrast with those promulgated by other authorities, who quite generally unite in the teaching that food never should be taken without appetite. Appetite is urged as the main consideration, because when appetite is natural and normal, that is the time when there is the most generous flow of digestive juices Does your "mouth water" at the thought of food? If it doesn't, the glands supplying the digestive fluids are not ready to pour them out. Consequently, if food is then taken into the stomach it will lie there undigested—the most terrible consumer of energy that exists.

The books of Horace Fletcher, and the experiments at Yale University under his direction, appear strongly to fortify this argument. Not only Fletcher, but other experimenters declare that food should not be taken except at the demands of an active, normal appetite, no matter how long one has to wait for the appetite The whole "fasting" cult acts on the same principle and claims astonishing results for health The hours of meals are held to be of no consequence compared with the natural craving for food

Physicians quite generally condemn the habit of taking a heavy meal in the middle of the day, for the reason that it is apt to be eaten hastily and that hard labor of mind or body immediately afterward further interferes with rapid and complete digestion

Professor Bergonie is also in sharp controversy with most authorities respecting the morning meal. The latter argue, in the first place, few people have any appetite for food so soon after rising. Secondly, that most stomachs early in the morning are mere flabby, bloodless bags, incapable of carrying on the energetic work of digestion until exercise and deeper breathing than occurs during sleep have brought them back to life.

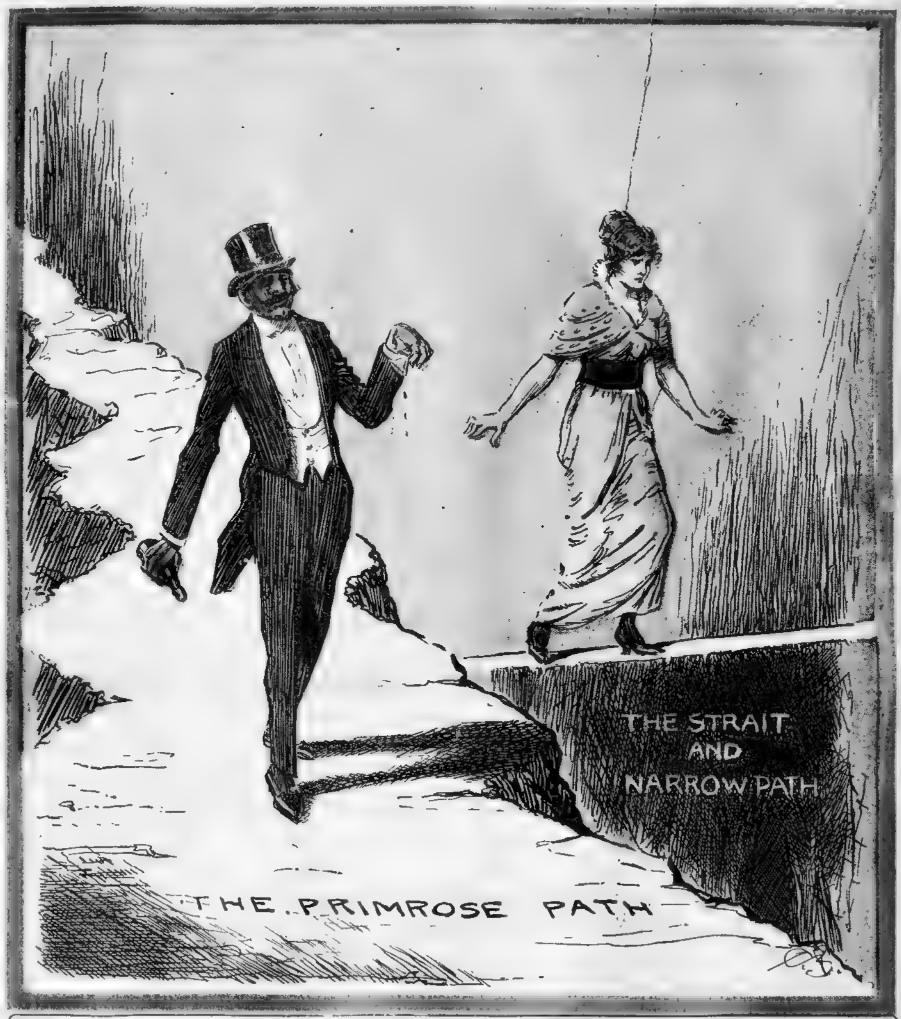
Quite possibly this condition, however, is due—as Professor Bergonie remarks—to our long-continued "deplorable" eating habits. It is natural to assume that such a revolution as he preaches could not be accomplished in a day, or a month. His experimenting family devoted six years to it. It probably is a case of "off with the old love (habit) before you're on with the new."

A year or two ago Professor Bergonie created quite a stir in medical circles by his announcement of the results of his experiments with electricity for nutritive purposes. He had proceeded on the theory that, as the essential purpose of food is to supply the body with internal warmth, that object ought to be better gained through the medium of electricity

He experimented upon himself, passing through his body low tension, high frequency currents. He testified to his brother scientists that the results were affirmative and conclusive—that these administrations of "electric food" actually increased the patient's weight, thus restoring lost tissue as well as supplying requisite heat and energy.

Morality for Men—and for Women

Copyright, 1914, by the Star Company. Great Britain Rights Reserved.



THE STRAIT AND NARROW PATH
THE PRIMROSE PATH

Civilization says that women must keep to the straight path, or be degraded, outcast forever.

Man may wander as he pleases, spend years in vicious living, reform when he pleases and be as respectable as the woman who all her life has lived morally.

And the men for whose convenience vice is established on a commercial basis alone make the laws for this system.

The HISTORY of the world is the story of man's brutality, self indulgence and vice, and of woman's patient submission to unjust conditions.

To-day, for the first time in the world's history, there is an effort to hold men, as well as women, responsible for their mode of life.

We take no note of the various sporadic, spasmodic religious movements of Puritans and others, which usually have meant only hypocrisy in another form.

There is no greater, more difficult question than that of morals, so-called "vice," and the remedy for conditions that produce sorrow, disease and a degraded race.

It has taken hundreds of centuries for men to reach a point where they even QUESTION their right to do as they please and to maintain thousands of women in degradation.

It will take other centuries, and many of them, to make the masses of men realize their disgrace and their duty. It will take centuries to give them moral and intellectual strength to combat their so-called "animal instincts."

With eighty thousand women condemned to professional moral degradation in the city of London alone, and the same condition unfortunately existing in other cities, the world must realize that progress at best will be slow. But, at least, THE THOUGHT of men's responsibility and of woman's right IS STARTED.

That which men have hidden for their own convenience, a subject kept covered with a cloak under which vice and disease have grown, is bared to the light and fearlessly discussed.

An excellent thing in the line of plain truth telling is a book that Christabel Pankhurst has written, called "Plain Facts About a Great Evil." Like all enthusiasts and leaders, this young woman hopes for too much. But the truths that she tells need telling.

* * *

It is NOT a fact, unfortunately, that votes for women would eliminate the viciousness and degradation of men.

Votes for female monkeys would not immediately make the male monkey of the forest any less mischievous or immoral.

To make them better it would be necessary to change those monkeys into something different. And to make men what they ought to be it is necessary to change the men.

The change will first come in the awakening of conscience. It will come also through the wholesome fear of the results of vice upon the mind and the body, with its diseases, the most dreadful in the world, and its weakening of every power.

But the better men, and the millions of good women, must do their work patiently and slowly, with plain truth telling and warning, and as soon as may be, with the influence of women's votes.

Woman's vote will not change over night the nature of the man-monkey in our civilization. But it will make him a less respectable creature in the eye of the law, and it will very soon establish the fact that there is such a thing as a fallen man as well as a fallen woman.

The day is far away, however, when intelligence will consider vice in a man as it considers vice in a woman. And that fact is woman's honor and glory.

The world has always expected more of women than of men, BECAUSE THE WOMEN ARE INFINITELY BETTER THAN MEN.

We do not ask of a dog that he shall be as respectable as his master, or that the same moral law shall govern him. And with our human race, as it stands, you cannot ask of the man that he shall be as good as the woman beside him—at least you will ask in vain.

* * *

Certain truths should be preached day in and day out, while laws carefully planned are made to punish where punishment can do any good, and to prevent where prevention is possible.

Every boy should know from his earliest youth that there is here on earth an actual punishment for vice as dreadful as any that man can conceive.

And every boy and man should know and be made to believe that viciousness is not necessary to health, and that a self-respecting life is possible and the best possible life for every man. A belief to the contrary is constantly circulated by the vicious and ignorant. Of this belief Clement Dukes, the physician of Rugby, one of the greatest boys' schools, says: "No greater lie was ever invented. It is simply a base invention to cover sin and has no foundation in fact."

The dangerous lie that men for the sake of health must be immoral or degenerate should be destroyed first of all.

"Medical testimony is that immorality not only soils and debilitates a man's body, but also contaminates his mind. Intractable to cure as is the bodily disease caused by immorality, the brain stains which it produces are even more difficult to wash away."

It should be understood also and above all that the problems of civilization will be settled in the future as they have been in the past—by the persistent morality and goodness of women as a class.

When men talk of "the same moral law for men and women" it must be understood that the meaning of the words is MEN MUST LEARN TO OBEY THE LAW THAT WOMEN HAVE IMPOSED UPON THEMSELVES. There will never be, as Miss Pankhurst says, any "wild oats for women." The fight will be made always to raise the moral standard of men, not to excuse the lowering of woman's moral standard.

When a man sees a hog wallowing in the filth of a sty he pities and deplores its condition. It does not occur to him to make matters right by climbing into the sty and lying down with the hog in the mudhole.

Good women deplore the vicious lives of men and pity them. But it does not occur to any good woman to share in man's right to be a beast.

* * *

We shall give you here some quotations from the book by Christabel Pankhurst already mentioned. These will cause many men and women to think seriously on the subject that the laws have neglected and that foolish, misnamed "modesty" has covered up. Miss Pankhurst asks:

> "Why is human nature to have full scope only in the one direction of vice? The answer to that question is that men have got all the power in the state, and therefore make not only the laws of the state, but also its morality."

It is largely true that men's vices, their "human nature," have been uncontrolled by laws which men make BECAUSE MAN'S "HUMAN NATURE" DEGRADES WOMAN BUT DOES NOT INTERFERE WITH MAN'S RIGHTS.

It was once the "human nature" of all men to steal and stab. But men made laws to stop these outbursts of "human nature" because THEY did not want to be stabbed or have their property stolen. When our law making power pays as much attention to the rights of women as to the rights of property, there will be less talk about "human nature" and man's right to condemn hundreds of thousands of women to lives of misery for their own convenience.

Of the effect of the vote upon women Miss Pankhurst says:

> "The outcome of enfranchisement will be to make women hate more than anything else in the world the very thought of selling themselves into slavery as under the conditions of the present day so many of them do sell themselves. The weapon of the vote will enable them to break down existing barriers to honest livelihood.
>
> "Upon men the effect o fwomen's enfranchisement will be to teach them that women are their human equals, and not the sub-human species that so many men now think them; not slaves to be bought and soiled and degraded and then cast away.
>
> "We know to what bodily and spiritual corruption the subjection of women has brought humanity. Let us now see to what cleanness and nobility we can arrive through her emancipation!"

Woman suffrage will make the world better. First, because it will bring woman's higher nature into the making of laws. Second, because it will compel men to consider women and discourage vice. It is true, and Miss Pankhurst puts it admirably, that the power of women means men of higher character.

> "Even though, by the degradation of a slave class of women, men could keep their bodies clean, they could not keep their minds clean, and the modern woman, emancipated as she is spiritually, will have nothing to do with men who are foul in mind."

When Queen Victoria ruled in England men who held public office were strictly moral on the surface at least. They did not dare to be otherwise, for they constantly asked themselves, "What will that old lady think?"

If you consider that man's viciousness is his own affair, remember, first, that some woman in the beginning is the victim of a vicious man, and, second, that the vice of man in the form of horrible disease is reflected in the suffering of women, GOOD WOMEN, wives and mothers.

> "Price, an American authority on the question at issue, says that out of 1,000 abdominal operations on women, 950—all, save 50—were the result of conditions due to disease resulting from vice."

From this American authority you learn that nine hundred and fifty times out of a thousand, when women are compelled to submit to abdominal operations, the operation is caused by a disease born of vice and given to the woman by the man.

Think of that when you talk of the feebleness of woman, her weak health and man's physical superiority.

Constantly women are under the surgeon's knife, their organs removed, their lives endangered. AND NINE HUNDRED AND FIFTY TIMES OUT OF A THOUSAND TIMES THIS IS DUE TO THE MAN WHO HAS GIVEN TO A DEFENSELESS WOMAN A DISEASE BORN OF IMMORALITY AND INFINITELY MORE HARMFUL TO THE WOMAN THAN TO THE MAN WHOSE VICE SPREADS IT OVER THE LAND.

The world must know that this question of vicious disease is not limited to a few individuals or to any class in the community.

The following statement is accurate and it should move deeply every man with a conscience:

> "Statistics show that the majority of men who marry have contracted disease, and that many are the bearers of contagion to the women they marry. We witness the effects in the women who suffer ill-health, sterility, mutilation of their bodies, and permanent invalidism. Society's only solicitude is that they suffer in silence. In addition, many of them are compelled to suffer the sight of their babies blinded at birth, children aborted or born with the mark of death upon them, or, if they survive, compelled to bear in their frail bodies the stigmata of degeneration and disease. No one can deny that these facts, the saddest facts of human experience, are of common occurrence, and they will continue so long as society shuts its eyes to the existence of this danger to the family, and from a false sense of prudery or a fastidious nicety refuse to be enlightened."

Considering how much harm is done in this world by the vice that deprives good women of the possibility of motherhood and keeps the whole race in a state of deterioration, it is no wonder that Christabel Pankhurst should write boldy:

> "If the bishops, and the whole pack of men who delight in advising, lecturing and preaching to women would exhort the members of their own sex to some sacrifice of their baser impulses, it would be better for the race, better for the women, and better even for the men."

What could be more pitiful than a pure woman, bearing no children, married to a worthless man, humbly blaming herself and criticised by the world, when in seventy-five cases out of a hundred the fault is with the man, and in a very great many cases the man's impotency is based upon a vicious disease?

> "It is declared by Dr. Prince Morrow that men are ultimately responsible for from fifty to seventy-five per cent of sterile marriages—that in twenty to twenty-five per cent of such cases the disease has destroyed the husband's capacity for fatherhood, and in the others the husband has infected his wife, and thus robbed her of the power of maternity."

The world must know the truth and face it. And those who, like Mrs. Pankhurst's courageous daughter, write the truth fearlessly, at the same time setting an example in their pure, unselfish, devoted lives, are true leaders and public benefactors of this day.

Violence of England's "Furies" Defended by Inez Millholland

Called Forth by "The Lurking Brutality in so Many Englishmen," It Is the Only Argument That Can Convince Them of the Justice of Woman's Cause, Says Mrs. Boissevain, Answering Sir Conan Doyle's Prediction of "Wholesale Lynching" for the Militants.

By Mrs. Inez Millholland Boissevain,

The Famous Woman Lawyer and American Militant Suffragist.

SIR ARTHUR CONAN DOYLE has predicted that wholesale lynching will be the answer of the men of England to the demand of the women of England for political liberty. I [illegible] surprised. Sir Arthur knows [illegible] so do the militants. Militancy is the result of that knowledge, and the losers in [illegible] game are not the women.

Brutality [illegible] when the origin of the instinct that [illegible] it is righteous, always reacts to the [illegible] of the person who makes use of it. It [illegible] the faculties that we have come to look upon as necessary to civilization. It deadens the sensibilities, it blurs imagination and sympathy, it coarsens the spiritual fibre and dims the perceptions. When the origin of the instinct to brutality lies itself in injustice these results are multiplied a thousandfold. That is why any such outbursts on the part of Englishmen as Sir Conan Doyle predicts would be fraught with danger to the spiritual progress of England.

In fact, these results are already apparent. The hardening process which officials and spectators have had to go through in order to carry through the persecution of English women fighting for their rights has led the authorities from depth to depth of degradation. England has become, as the London Times [illegible] says, "the laughing stock of the nations"—not because of the repeated triumphs of the militants over the Government but because of the repeated exhibitions of spiritual poverty among her statesmen.

Now I am not disputing the fact that Sir Arthur Conan Doyle's predictions as to the future attitude of Englishmen towards English women [illegible] result in lynching. On the contrary, [illegible] existence of such lurking brutality in the nature of so many Englishmen that is responsible for the character of the activities of England's women. The militants are not betraying their own natures by their activities. The[illegible] betraying their intimate knowledge of the natures of English men, who have for centuries looked upon women as "something better than a dog, a little dearer than his horse," and have treated them accordingly, privately and publicly, in police courts and the sanctity of the home, permitting, for example, the husband to beat his wife and, when battered and bruised, she appeared in court against him, to punish him with a fine of $5.

Any reflection cast by the violence of the actions of the militants should fall where it belongs—on the statesmen who are responsible. Brutality begets brutality; violence begets violence; law-breaking begets law-breaking; and if English women have disregarded the law, in the making of which they have had no say, you may be quite sure the law-breaking game did not begin with them. It began with their opponents, and, apparently, if what Sir Arthur Conan Doyle says is true it is likely to end where it began.

That the Government was the first to disregard law and constitutional rights many people do not know. The women who were first arrested as a result of their interruptions of political meetings—interruptions which are by no means illegal—were confined, as every prisoner is confined who is committed for political offences, even though that offence be murder, in the first division of the English prisons.

Later the Government, in order to intimidate the women, committed them to the Third Division, although at no time was it suggested that their offence had any other than a political motive. The Third Division is the one reserved for common criminals, and hence the incarceration of political prisoners there was a denial to the women of a right that had never been denied to men.

This fa[illegible] was responsible for the hunger strike.

The hunger strike is not a protest against imprisonment. It is a protest, and the only protest [illegible] prisoners, prisoners being individuals [illegible] degree worse off than those [illegible] Constitution—against [illegible] the Third Division. So long [illegible] were granted their rights [illegible] the First Division, there was no hunger striking. When their "prison" rights were denied them, they struck.

Now, if the British Government is in the right, why does [illegible] allow these hunger striking women [illegible] prison? The answer is simple. [illegible] It is because the actions of these [illegible] would be responsible, i. e., of the British Government, will not bear the investigation [illegible] deaths would entail.

Further, [illegible] to realize that it is a denial of a constitutional right that is responsible for the outbreaks in Parliament Square and Buckingham Palace. The Bill of Rights provides that every subject shall have the right to petition the King or his representative, the Prime Minister, for the redress of any grievance, provided that such subject or subjects do not approach the King or his representative in a deputation larger than thirteen.

Now, it is because the Prime Minister, Mr. Asquith, has steadily refused to receive such a deputation from the Women's Social and Political Union that all outbreaks, with their attendant outrages to the women, like that of Black Friday, have occurred. The women have attempted to approach the Prime Minister in deputations never larger than thirteen, and their approach has been blocked by the police. The women were perfectly within their rights; the Prime Minister was the outlaw.

After repeated and futile demands to interview the King's representative, the women determined to lay their grievances before the King himself, in accordance with the Bill of Rights. The [illegible] refusal of a constitutional privilege follo[illegible] the same disturbance resulted. And [illegible] is in the same position as the Pri[illegible] except that the King is supposed [illegible] law, and hence it is impossible for [illegible] guilty of outlawry.

The important point is [illegible] women were at all times constitutional [illegible] their behavior when acting officially. As individuals they have protested against denials of constitutional recognition of their organization in va[illegible] ways.

[illegible] have slashed pictures, broken shop windows, burned houses, and as the public knows, protested in every possible manner. Such form of protest is the only one possible to people who are outside the Constitution.

Ignored by the Press, unrepresented in the Government, they have no means of making their grievances felt except by actions which stir to attention people otherwise apathetic. If they did not do this, the struggle would be simply one between themselves and the Government of which the public at large would not be aware, and since the Government is obedient to the mandates of the people, the people must be stirred to give mandates sufficiently vehement to make the Government act.

Now, masses of the people are, as I say, apathetic. They care very little; or at least they do not care enough, to get fighting mad about abstract principles of right and wrong. The trick, then, is to get them into a state of fighting madness. This you can only do by touching them at some point very dear to themselves, i. e., their purse, their pleasure, their comfort or their security.

The militants have aroused every class and every group into demanding that the Government take action with regard to votes for women—artists, by the destruction of pictures, sportsmen, by their interference at racetracks, public games, etc.; churchmen, by the destruction of churches; merchants, by the smashing of shop windows; the nobility by their interference with court functions; property owners, by the burning down of manors; and, in fact, every class, except those who have enrolled themselves on their side—the working class.

Their strategy is worthy of Napoleon. Of course, some of the groups I have mentioned are roused to demand only that the Government repress the women, by way of improving matters, but the majority of the people do not care how the Government solves the problem, provided only that they do something so that trade may be resumed and the normal life of England revert to its accustomed course.

Now, there is only one thing that the Government can do to solve the problem, and that is to grant votes to women. Nothing else will kill the idea and the character of its manifestation. They may torture and murder Mrs. Pankhurst and her daughters, imprison or deport every militant in England, and the question will not be solved.

As Mrs. Pankhurst says "You cannot kill an idea," and for every militant tortured, dead or imprisoned, ten others arise to take her place. The movement, like every movement of truth and vitality, simply gains force through every attempt at suppression, so that the business and pleasure of England will remain in jeopardy until votes for women is assured. The King will not be able to take his morning ride in the park in comfort, nor hold his court, nor attend his dinner parties, nor shoot his pheasants, nor play his races. The Ministers are likewise "hobbled" in all their activities, and the people of England can never be certain that the next outbreak won't occur at their door.

Such a steady and general discomfort must have an end, and there is only one end. For every person who is alienated in sympathy by such outbursts, there is one who is won over by the courage, the fortitude, the statesmanship and the determination of the women, and the spiritual force represented by this group outweighs a thousandfold that represented by its opponents.

It is this spiritual force that the Government is so afraid of; for when truth, righteous demands, vigor, vision, political sagacity and uncompromising courage are allied against them, the government that opposes is doomed. Even those who at first opposed the militants are obliged to admit their foresight and right thinking by adoption of their tactics. The constitutional suffragists who have condemned militancy, have nevertheless been condemned to revise their first condemnation of opposition to the Government, and are now themselves busily engaged in defeating government candidates.

In conjunction with their extraordinary political fore[illegible] there exists an administrative and executive capacity, and a practical business shrewdness that have built up a fighting organization, which is unexcelled throughout history. Consider for a moment, what a vigorous element will be injected into English political life when these women are enfranchised. The argument that women should not vote because English militants are noisy and unpleasant is the silliest of all. The English militants are the best argument for votes for women that we hav[illegible] For here we see delicately nurtured women, whose instincts are away from violence and [illegible] and in the direction of philosophical contemplativeness, gentleness of word and deed, sobriety of thought, and devotion to the needs of their fellow-creatures, who are able for the sake of a mighty principle to do violence to their natures and strike a blow for righteousness.

Let no one imagine that their actions do not require fortitude. Swarming into the army ranks and presenting a united front to the enemy is child's play in comparison. Alone, unarmed, unaided, the women make their protests—exposing themselves to the fury of the mob, the contempt of their neighbors and that most difficult of all oppositions—public ridicule. It is a rebellion titanic in the proportions of the spiritual price that it represents. As one lusty cockney expressed it in Hyde Park, where the women were holding a meeting, "Go it—and Gawd bless the militants! They're the only folks left in England with a drop o' John Bull blood in their veins."

No wonder "God's Englishmen" of the bull dog, beef-eating, bullying variety are afraid. And I dare say that at the last ditch in the struggle, which, with characteristic doggedness they recognize as inevitably victorious for the women, they will take to lynching. If it were not for that possibility among Englishmen there would be no militancy.

To be sure, there are men in England, gallant men, and many of them, who understand and are proud of and support the women in their struggle, but they are not included in the Government. The Government, as such, will only receive the quality of spiritual enlightenment it so strongly needs, when women as well as men are included in it. Being such as it is at present, it must be dealt with with methods that it understands. With the methods that Magna Chartists, Cromwell and American Colonists of '77, the Corn Rioters, and the Home Rulers have employed so successfully against it—it must be beaten and bullied into liberal and democratic action.

The women are not responsible for the rules of the political game, unless they themselves are able to lay down those rules, until that time, they must play politics according to the rules laid down by men.

And that is the finest thing about them. While deploring the necessity for militant activity, they have recognized that in the present political condition of things it is imperative, and have played the game according to alien rules, in a way that has made the whole world stop and look and listen, and consider their demands.

Incidentally, they have done so on the advice of a man—a statesman who, like Sir Arthur Conan Doyle, knew his England. The late Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman, when, as Prime Minister, he was approached by the women with the suggestion that he handle their question in Parliament, replied: "My dear ladies, I would do so, being a hearty believer in votes for women, were your question one of practical politics. Take it out of the realm of philosophy and academic discussion, and make it such, and I will gladly deal with it."

"But how are we to do it, Sir Henry?" the women asked.

"In the same fashion as men have done," he replied."

"And that is?"

"Kick up a row."

And they did. They took his advice. They kicked up a row. They have been kicking up a row ever since, and like the American Revolutionist, and the Home Ruler, they will only cease when they have kicked an obtuse government into recognition.

* * * * * *

But whether or not one grants the political wisdom of militancy, one cannot help but admire the courage of the women in carrying through a programme which they believe the situation demands.

Think of the skill, daring, self-sacrifice and determination of Emily Davidson, who threw herself before the King's horse, in order to call His Majesty's attention to the outrages endured by women in His Majesty's prisons. What man has done more for a cause in which he believed? Think of the pluck of the little debutante, who in all the pomp and circumstance of a court function, dared to raise her voice to implore the King to have pity on women. She drew down upon herself the disapproval and contempt of family, friends and unsympathetic functionaries, who themselves were overawed by the "divinity that doth hedge a King" to the extent of considering such a pitiful little plea for mercy as a deadly insult to His Majesty.

Remember, too, the reply of the women who slashed pictures in order to compel attention to woman's demand, to the judge who sentenced her: "What are five pictures compared with 80,000 pictures by the Greatest Artists of all? What are five pictures in your gallery damaged compared with 80,000 women sentenced to the gutter by your laws and your government, shamefully defaced, damaged and disgraced by men each night."

These are the sort of women called "furies," "vandals," etc., by a time-serving press in England.

It's Reasonable to Believe in Miracles, Says G. K. Chesterton

By G. K. Chesterton,

the Distinguished English Publicist.

I SEE that Mr. William Archer has been calling me the Apostle of Unreason. It seems to me a specially interesting example of how Rationalism undermines the reasoning power. Mr. Archer is an able man and a lover of truth, and I am certain that nothing but Rationalism could have made him so irrational as that. For the plain and palpable modern fact is exactly the other way. There really are some writers, very modern and fashionable writers at that, who are Apostles of Unreason and say they are.

Mr. Bergson is an Apostle of Unreason. He really seems to hold that we may find out what we want by trying to get it—without knowing what it is. The late Professor William James, stimulating and sympathetic as he was, might not unfairly be called an Apostle of Unreason. Mr. Bernard Shaw has often been a serious and sincere Apostle of Unreason. He has maintained that all logic leads to killing oneself, and, of the two, it is better to kill logic. Nietzsche was something like an Apostle of Unreason. He said, "We must have chaos within that we may give birth to a dancing star." The Pragmatists are Apostles of Unreason. Nearly all the Modernists who were condemned in the Pope's Encyclical were condemned for being Pragmatists and Apostles of Unreason.

Anyone who will read the Encyclical will see that I state the essential fact. Oscar Wilde set the fashion of being an Apostle of Unreason when he said that brute reason was hitting below the intellect. Dr. Brandes, the distinguished Jew and sceptic, helped to set the fashion of being an Apostle of Unreason when he said, I think, "Who knows that two and two do not make five in the planet Jupiter?" To which I answer, "I do."

The question seems to be quite as senseless as saying, "Who knows that yes is not the same as no in the State of Maine?" I have never been to the State of Maine, thank God; but I know that yes is not the same as no anywhere. Mr. John Davidson, that unfortunate man of genius, took up the trade of Apostle of Unreason and praiser of pure force and will; and a philosophic work recently published by a French Freethinker warns its readers against reason as something that clogs and chains the sacred changes of Evolution. In short, we may really say that nearly all the people who consider themselves specially progressive, advanced, up-to-date, modernist, or futurist, are avowedly Apostles of Unreason. Practically, it comes to this, that the people who are now opposed to reason are practically all the people who are also opposed to rel[illegible]

But to say that I am opposed to reason is simply not true. I ask no better description of the Pragmatist position which denies the authority of reason than that given by Mr. Bentley's detective in "Trent's Last Case," that it is "bad Christianity and [illegible] infernal nonsense." I think the modern attempt to get rid of reasoning altogether is very like some of the attempts to get rid of fighting altogether; I think it is unmanly and unworthy of a man. Decadents may like living in a dream which they can alter at any moment to suit themselves, in which they can create causes without creating consequences, in which they can [illegible] the future or unmake the past. But I think a decent working man of any class, whether he's work[illegible] cube root or cabbage roots, ought to be glad that, as he sows, so shall he surely reap. As these are my views about reason and unreason, and as I have often defended them against Mr. Bernard Shaw, Mr. H. G. Wells and others, it becomes a really interesting question to ask how so intelligent a man as Mr. Archer has come to consider me in so opposite a light, and where he got his notion that I am an Apostle of Unreason.

Well, I pass over what I cannot help calling the rather cheap part of the argument, which seems to consist in chaffing me with the little-known and carefully concealed fact that I cannot work miracles. Nevertheless, as Mr. Archer gloomily notes, I said at Cambridge that I thought it probable that some other people could.

Well, I cannot work miracles; and I seem to remember somebody who (as I believe) could work miracles, but who was taunted in the hour of death with not working them, and taunted in vain. So that in pure reason, even the non-performance of miracles would not prove an inability to perform them. Anyhow, I cannot (so far as I know, for agnosticism is too easily forgotten nowadays) work miracles.

I cannot, as Mr. Archer, that demoniac detective, has discovered, move the Albert Hall from London to Paris; and levitation in my own case would probably be about as difficult as in the case of the parallel structure of the Albert Hall. This is true, and it affects the question of whether miracles can happen about as much as the fact that I cannot tame lions affects the question of whether they have ever been tamed; or the fact that I have never been known to fly upside down affects the question of whether it has ever been done. A miracle is, by hypothesis, a marvel. That is to say, it is a very rare and a very unexpected thing. If it could be done by anybody at any minute, it is surely as plain as a pikestaff that it could not fulfil the function, true or false, which its supporters suppose it to fulfil. It is part of Mr. Archer's argument that miracles seem ineffectual for their purpose. I can earnestly assure him that they would be much more ineffectual if I were allowed to work them. But I cannot think that Mr. Archer takes this part of his argument seriously. It is just his passion for paradox.

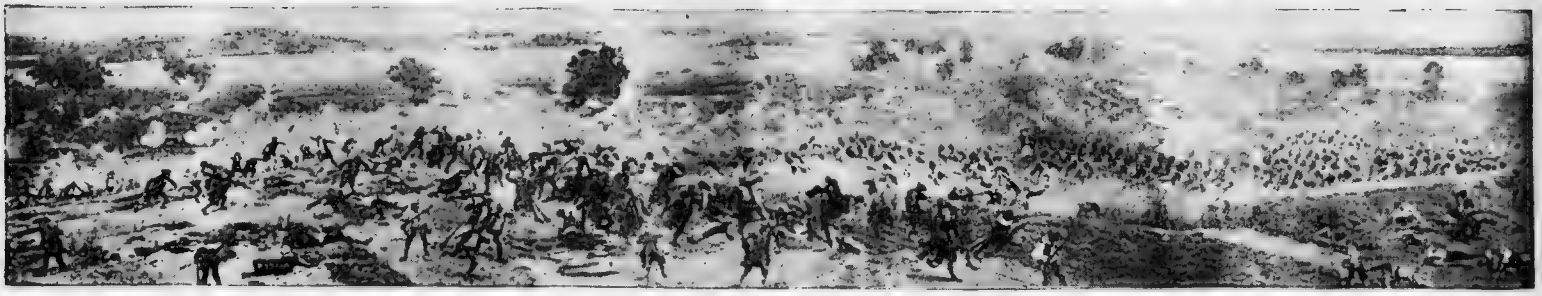
Speaking as the Apostle of Reason, I now remark that Mr. Archer's difficulty resides in a definable fallacy: the confusion between the comprehension of the deduction and the comprehensiveness of the data. If he is arguing from a Monist first principle, that it is inconceivable to suppose that a Supreme intelligence could change its mind, or blasphemous to suppose that it would wish to, then his argument is quite fair; he is not bound to give up his simple faith for the sake of fragmentary manifestations which must, even for their own purpose, be few and far between. But if he is arguing from the evidence or absence of evidence, I must say frankly that I do not think he knows the evidence.

I do not speak in arrogance; I did not know it myself from the ordinary good education given to an intelligent Englishman or Scotchman; I did not know it until close on middle age, when other moral problems turned my studies in that direction. History is horribly badly taught in England and Scotland; for the very natural reason that some thousand years of it has to be made out as much sillier than it was. I have only space to allude to one case; the case of witchcraft. I think a candid inquirer will come to the conclusion that some witches were really in league with invisible powers of evil, if he believes the documents—and most certainly if he believes the witches. I take the case of witchcraft for three reasons of very varying value. One is that I do not think justice has ever been done either to the truth or falsehood of the fine play of "The Witch" which Mr. Granville Barker produced. Second, and more important, because in this case one cannot be accused of mere optimistic make-believe. Nobody wants to think that their fellow-creatures had fallen under the influence of fiends. If any fairly good-natured person thinks so, it must be because he has honestly tried to face realities.

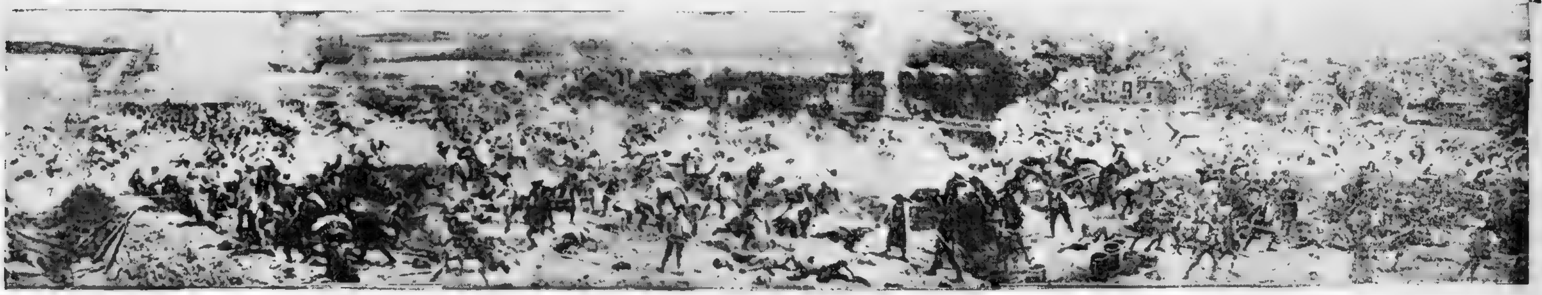
I cannot say, of course, that if Mr. Archer had been told the whole truth he would have drawn the same deductions as I do. But I can say, with considerable confidence, that his pastors and masters did not tell him the whole truth; I can say it on the principle that inspires the cheerful Cockney sentiment of "Same here!" The plain truth is that lies have been told and have got to be untold. And the last and most important reason for mentioning witches is this: that nobody can begin to understand the theoretic defence of the miraculous who does not understand the idea of a positive fight against positive evil. We should be right in thinking it silly for the good angels to interfere, if none of us believed in bad angels. A miracle, if you like, proclaims martial law in the universe. But it is not unreasonable; for it may be the only way of reconciling reason with divine justice.

TRUE STORY of the BATTLE OF BUNKER HILL Told in Brief by WILLIAM HAVEN ROSS

THE FAMOUS CYCLORAMA OF THE BATTLE OF BUNKER HILL, FORMED IN ONE GREAT CIRCULAR CANVAS, PAINTED BY L. KOWALSKY.



The final assault by British troops, which drove the Americans from hastily erected fortifications when the patriots were out of powder and outnumbered. This view shows the scene looking toward Chelsea and East Boston.



Looking toward Boston. Charlestown houses in flames. British fleet in the stream near the old North End Point.

THE first Bunker Hill day was the most terrible and the most glorious in the annals of Boston, and it put this city forever in a prominent place on the historical map. It was the 17th of June, 1775, one hundred and thirty-nine years ago. It altered the course of empire, unified Great Britain as it is now and introduced among the nations of the earth the greatest of republics. Yet this historic battle, where glory was to the vanquished and not the victors, was fought more than a year before Thomas Jefferson wrote and the Declaration of Independence was signed by representatives of the American colonies.

The first Fourth of July was in 1776. Before that date New England had fought King George's trained troops at Lexington, Concord and Charlestown and had driven, for those days, a great army out of Boston. The colonies had no government of their own when Bunker Hill was fought for, and its defenders in legal status had as little standing as a mob. But the War of the Revolution, formally declared a year later, was begun in Massachusetts eight years before it ended in Virginia.

What caused the revolt of Massachusetts and other colonies was oppression by the Crown, as the government of the mother country was known. Old England had fought a great war with France for the maintenance of its rule on this continent. It had gone deeply into debt in wresting Canada from the French. It sought to impose taxes upon the colonies to raise revenue, the Tory ministry of George III claiming they should share the burden. The answer of the colonials was, "No representation, no taxation." They had furnished their quota of troops against the French. They had no membership in Parliament. They were governed by men sent 3,000 miles across the sea. They began a struggle for home rule because of oppression by the Tory party, then in power in England. Their friends in "the Old Home" were Whigs, the political predecessors of the party which has just granted the Irish the privilege of parliamentary government of their own in Ireland.

Resistance to the Stamp Tax and other measures odious to the majority of colonists led them to revolt. King George sent to Boston, considered the centre of sedition, a great army for that era to overawe the people. Patriotic colonists in New England organized an army which the British soldiery laughed at as a rabble. To ridicule colonials a King's soldier wrote "Yankee Doodle." Provincials formed a makeshift government. It raised a motley army of perhaps 15,000 men and it surrounded Boston and beleaguered the proud British troops. This city of about 18,000 population was regarded then as the most important in the western hemisphere. It was, so far as the English people were concerned. The headquarters of the American army was Cambridge. General George Washington of Virginia had not then arrived to take command. It was under the leadership of General Artemas Ward. Most militant patriots of Boston had fled from home to join it, but there were many left within its limits to give warning of whatever the British sought to do. Word came to provincial leaders that General Gage, commander of the King's troops, was going to send detachments to fortify Charlestown. At a hasty council of war, against the judgement of [illegible] the leaders of the martialled colonists determined to seize Charlestown first. They did so on the eve of June 17, and, erecting fortifications, fought with the British the next day one of the bravest, bloodiest battles in human history.

Colonel William Prescott and [illegible] thousand men were detailed on the eve of the fight to go to Charlestown and erect fortifications on Bunker Hill. At about 9 o'clock in the evening this command assembled on Cambridge Common, where Dr. Langdon, president of Harvard College, offered prayer. The rank and file did not know where they were going or what was expected. They only understood they were going to fight, and were ready. It was a secret expedition. Colonel Prescott, who had served as a lieutenant at the taking of Louisburg, Cape Breton, seventeen years before, marched at the head with two men who carried lanterns. The slides were opened in the rear, so as to show light only, like glowworms, to the men behind. It was a motley regiment. Like all the men who fought next day, there was no uniformity as to weapons or dress. They carried fowling pieces and muskets of all bores. It is said that Prescott wore soldier clothes. But at the height of the battle he was arrayed in a loose calico or linen garment, called a "banyan." It may have been the equivalent of a "duster." He carried a sword. Perhaps he was the only officer who did. Commanders, high and low, held very nebulous commissions. Their rank was really determined by the best authority of all—esteem and confidence of their men.

With the detachment went General Putnam of Connecticut, who is said to have left his plough in the field and to have mounted his horse and rode all the way to Cambridge as soon as he heard of the Lexington fight. Colonel Richard Gridley was the engineer. In darkness, in silence and swiftly afoot the regiment moved across Charlestown Neck to Bunker Hill, where the order of the Committee of Safety said fortifications should be erected. There they halted and a consultation was held by officers. It ended in the command moving toward the end of the Charlestown peninsula and to a lower elevation, known as Breed's Hill. It was there that the battle was fought. Just why they took possession of the lower height has always been a question. Its summit was about as high above sea level as the roof of a six-story building in Boston is today. The top of Bunker Hill was at the elevation of a twelve-story one.

It was midnight when the work of erecting the redoubt began. Shovels and picks had been brought in carts. Colonel Gridley laid out the line of the breastworks with wooden pegs and tape, and on that still, hot June morning the Americans, mostly farmers, began an arduous task. The work they accomplished in four hours, or by daylight, astonished the British—and the world. Along the mouth of the Charles River were a fleet of the King's warships—the Glasgow, the Somerset, the Lively, the Cerberus and others, including floating batteries. The men who toiled at the redoubt were fearful they would be detected before their work was done. Colonel Prescott had the shores watched for the least sign of alarm on the warships. His men could hear the cries of the sentries on watch and the ship's bells as they tolled the hours.

When dawn broke the British on ships and land saw in amazement what the colonials had done so quickly under the cover of darkness. It was not much after 4 o'clock in the morning when the Lively began to cannonade the works. From that time on until around 4 in the afternoon ship guns roared almost continuously. Had the elevation been less they would probably have smashed the earthworks into dust and driven their defenders into the hollow of the two hills. It was a terrifying ordeal for undisciplined countrymen, fresh from the plough, but they stood it like veterans. Before finishing work upon defences, the Americans piled rails and hay that lay in winnows or was stacked in cocks on the slope of the hill upon a low stone fence which was in the rear and to the north of the redoubt. There was a wide space between the redoubt and this frail barricade. But under the raking fire of the Lively it could hardly have been bridged, even if material had been at hand. Southeasterly from the redoubt, about the centre of which is now the site of Bunker Hill Monument, there was a slight cover where hay and fence rails were hastily thrown together. It was a long distance from end to end of the American line, which stretched to the shore of the Mystic River, for a few hundred men to defend. They formed a thin homespun line. Some reinforcements came to Prescott, but not what he had asked for, and the men who had marched or worked all [illegible] spent the day under a broiling sun, with little food or water.

When cannon of their fleet aroused the British soldiery there was a great stir in this town. Most of King George's troops were encamped on the Common, except [illegible] which had just arrived from England, and were still aboard transports in the harbor because accommodations ashore had not been found. General Gage, the commander-in-chief of the British, called a council of war. One legend is he had been up all night talking with Admiral Warren of the fleet, and both were drinking punch when cannonading told of the audacity of the Yankees.

Even with disciplined troops to command, it took time to prepare for battle. First there was a council of war between the generals, and then General Gage, hated by patriots, issued his orders. General Howe was placed in command of the attacking force, with General Pigot as his second. Regiments were assigned to duty and the first detachment marched down State, then King street, to Long Wharf. There were twenty-eight barges or row boats awaiting, with sailors from the warships at the oars. The British boat flotilla made an imposing appearance as it was swept onward by long, steady strokes toward Charlestown. The soldiers were in red coats and their arms glistened in the sun like burnished silver. In the bows of some boats were brass cannon intended for field work. The Americans had some cannon, too, but it was not to be a battle in which artillery was of much service for either side. The British landed at Moulton's Point, near where the bridge to Chelsea begins now. A low hill there, long since levelled, gave the troops protection as they stepped ashore. General Howe looked the field over carefully and sent for reinforcements. They took boats near where the Chelsea ferry slip is in Boston now. They landed at what is now the navy yard. It was afternoon before all the reserves arrived, and meanwhile "Tommy Atkins" lolled in the soft high grass, ate rations out of his knapsack and drank out of tubs which probably contained beer. Up on the eminence where they were entrenched—and waiting—the weary, famished, thirsty Americans saw all this. They had seen sixty-four British companies disembark below them. The warships were raining cannon balls at them, but they [illegible] fear of ship artillery. It had done little damage.

Some British officers who were in the fight said the three attacks did not occupy more than an hour, but others that the battle raged for several. When the British advanced it was with the steadiness of soldiers on parade. They had to cross fields broken by apple trees, by fences, by a kiln and in one place by a morass. But they pressed steadily forward in unbroken formation. Then they were belted, carried their knapsacks and were fully accoutred. The load that a regular carried in those days was heavy. Man for man, they were not as tall nor heavy as the raw-boned colonials who awaited them. Many of the Americans had served in the war against France, or had fought Indians, others were absolutely untried in war. But obeying orders, with very few exceptions, they waited until they could see "the whites of their eyes" before pouring in a volley upon the foe. It was a terrible one. Whole ranks of British soldiers went down before it. They broke and fled. There was a cheer from the redoubt and the breastworks. Few Americans had been hurt. The enemy had fired by platoons with splendid precision as to formation on the advance, but without taking aim. Most of their bullets went high over the heads of the Americans.

The men behind the redoubt and fences had taken careful aim. Like most Americans of that day, they were deadly at such short range. They were instructed to kill or wound officers. How they obeyed orders is told by the frightful mortality among the latter. Many of them were of noble families, almost all of the gentry. When the death list was scanned at the Court of St. James, it caused consternation.

The slope of the hill presented a fearful sight. In the grass were many dead. The wounded writhed frightfully. Even bullets were scarce among the Americans. British surgeons told of extracting nails and all kinds of missiles from their wounded. During the battle there were ninety-two commissioned British officers killed or wounded. The sergeants and corporals fared no better. Of non-commissioned dead or maimed there were 202. Nineteen commissioned officers were killed outright during the day.

The second assault resulted like the first in great slaughter and retreat. Only the British were allowed to approach even nearer before [illegible] General Howe, who, like other officers, had exposed himself recklessly to urge on his men, by this time was joined by General Clinton. The latter had left his station at the battery on Copp's Hill without orders when he had seen the flower of the British army wither under and flee before the fire of a despised foe. But all the King's generals and other officers found it hard to rally their soldiers for a third assault. They beat them back into line with their swords. Meanwhile General Howe had heard that the Americans were well nigh out of ammunition. One of his officers, when near the breastworks during the second charge, had heard a colonial shout, "We're out of powder!" Knapsacks were discarded, and on the third attack many of the British charged without coats. This time they tried the bayonet, a weapon which few of Prescott's men were armed with. The Americans mowed down the enemy again, and [illegible] their ground long enough to even fight [illegible] to hand with stones and clubbed [illegible] without powder they could not [illegible] back the red tide then. They [illegible] order up the slope of Bunker Hill [illegible] Putnam and hundreds of men were [illegible]

Needless Cruelty to Animals on City Streets

Heavy Harnesses, High Checking, Flapping Blinders and Needlessly Inhumane Stable Conditions a Blot on Civilization, Declares Expert Investigator.

FEW individ[illegible] posted [illegible] affecting our dumb animals [illegible] of Boston [illegible] former [illegible] Society [illegible] Cruelty to Animals, and [illegible] Humane Education Society [illegible] cruelty practiced [illegible] progressive and [illegible] existence.

"I spent [illegible] two years [illegible] and country," said [illegible] Packard [illegible] AMERICAN representative [illegible] investigating [illegible] wild animals.

"Why [illegible] these abuses not [illegible] long [illegible] corrected? It is because [illegible] to do [illegible] necessary thing, [illegible] press [illegible] employed [illegible].

The animals suffer in silence [illegible] a sound. They rely upon our humane [illegible] thoughtfulness, sympathy, energy and courage [illegible] note and redress their wrongs. [illegible] creatures, many of them are owned by tyrants.

There are any number of humane owners who treat their beasts considerately. I am not criticising them at all, but the tyrant owner, both rich and poor, who should be made to see the light and move toward [illegible].

Take animal conditions here in Boston. There are a thousand horses on the streets of Greater Boston suffering daily the most excruciating pain through tight check reining. It is the same [illegible] the State and throughout the country.

Hour after hour throughout the day these patient and willing beasts are denied a down [illegible] of the neck. Go and see how they toss their heads in agony, trying to ease their necks. God alone knows what they suffer.

The overcheck rein is an instrument of torture, and is wrong harnessing; motion picture operations will prove it tortures the horse. I [illegible] humanitarians to take up this fight and work for a law abolishing the use of check reins and blinders on [illegible] in Massachusetts.

Go look at the thousands of pairs of torturing, close fitting blinders worn by horses on the streets of Boston, banging against the [illegible] eyes [illegible] make and produce [illegible] make horses [illegible].

[illegible] blinders [illegible] horses should be [illegible] out of existence. [illegible] worst offenders [illegible] animal [illegible] are [illegible] people and business men. No amount of [illegible] education, molasses talk or 'Please be kind to animals' propaganda will ever bring these tyrannical animal despots to terms. What our dumb animals need are friends and champions who will fight for their rights. [illegible] suffering can be stopped by back[illegible].

The testimony of a hundred thousand horse owners and handlers of the United States could [illegible] produced, who have no use for blinders or check reins, and who condemn them utterly.

[illegible] the grasping, ignorant, calloused [illegible], shiftless, sporty classes and the [illegible] crowd who outrage horses and [illegible] them to suffer.

There are no blinders in use in Russia [illegible] prima facie proof that they are unnecessary. The newspapers drove blinders off the streets of Paris. The President of the French republic [illegible] taking a hand in this humane warfare to protect dumb beasts from unjust oppression and tyranny.

Again, go follow these silent martyrs of civilization, the horses, to their stables at night and witness how they are packed [illegible] narrow, lightless, ammonia reeking [illegible] barely wide enough to contain their bodies when standing erect. They are the [illegible] of old-fashioned, misery stabling [illegible].

In the majority of cases the beast has no chance to lie down, and the chances are that [illegible] twelve hours at a stretch water [illegible]. Whether a horse, eating a dry ration, [illegible] drop of water all night long is wholly optional with the stable boy.

"I have been out after midnight with the police in large cities all over Massachusetts inspecting stables and stalls to see how horses were cared for at night in hot weather, and I have found thousands of these beasts half strangled.

"They will give a horse salt to eat and strap his head up to the manger so he can't get it within two feet of the floor to get sleep; he is denied simple creature comforts.

"In two years' time as a humane field agent traveling all over Massachusetts I have found but two large stables where they had the humaneness to blanket their horses at night.

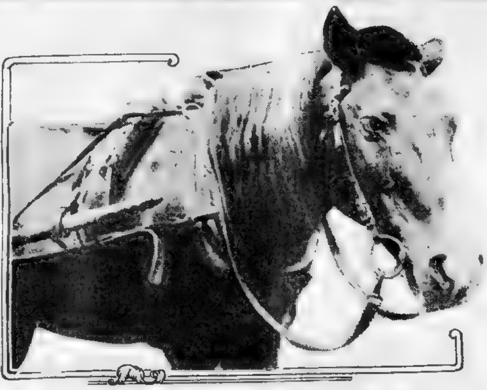
"Horses and cows thrash around all night long covered and tormented with flies, unable to sleep and robbed of water to quench a raging thirst.

"Take abattoir and slaughter house conditions where meat food is prepared. The brutality and suffering inflicted upon animals and fowl when slaughtered for food is a blight on civilization.

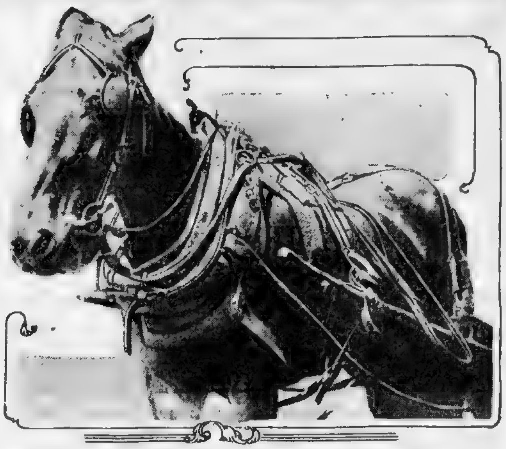
"Beef creatures and hogs are murdered, that's the word, and the way they commonly take a fowl's life is a crime against nature.

"The time has arrived to do something more than negative acts of kindness to animals. Suffering, cruelty and torment exist. The entire country will follow any militant action which Massachusetts takes.

"I urge the humane societies, the women's clubs and Band of Mercy children to start this humane crusade."



Treating a horse right—no blinders, no check rein and a lightweight harness. A cool, hygienic horsehair back pad and collar pad that won't chafe are being used



Seventy-five pounds of old junk harness and oppressive useless blinders are crowded on this horse. There is no law to prevent it.

TRUE STORY OF BATTLE OF BUNKER HILL

formidable showing that the victors paused, they were doubtless glad to stop. A colonial [illegible] their account, they had sent only 2,000 men to battle, yet they admitted that their killed and wounded numbered more than 1,050. No one has ever known just how many Americans were engaged. Their total loss was not above [illegible].

[illegible] the death of Dr. Joseph Warren, one of the most prominent of Boston's physicians, and who was a colonial general by rank, although he fought in the ranks with a musket as a volunteer, patriots had great cause to mourn. He was shot when his comrades began to retreat, and his fate was lamented by even the British. Many of the redcoat officers were his personal friends.

The Americans retreated over Bunker Hill and across Charlestown Neck, which was [illegible] swept, as it had been all day, by shot from the warship Glasgow. Colonel Prescott, when he reached Charlestown, asked General Ward for reinforcements and munitions, and wanted to return to Charlestown and retake the position from which he had been driven. The British rested on their arms and fortified Bunker Hill subsequently. They did not want to [illegible] Americans come back.

The night of the battle was [illegible] in Boston. For hours all kinds of vehicles were taking through the streets the wounded soldiers. The death list was appalling. The populace had crowded every vantage point during the battle. They had swarmed on hills, on roofs and even clung to church steeples. The roar of warship cannon had shaken [illegible] for hours, and the rattle of musketry in the afternoon had added to the din. By nightfall the tumult was over, but over in Charlestown the embers of a fire-swept town still glowed. Early in the battle the British had complained of being shot at from houses on their flank and in reprisal the British artillerymen on Copp's Hill had fired balls of blazing sulphur and pitch into the stricken town. Several hundred buildings were burned.

Although the British won the battle by driving the Americans from their entrenchments and out of Charlestown, the result was regarded by the Americans as a victory. The latter believed that had they been reinforced, or if they had had [illegible] they would have held the ground. It is doubtful even if English [illegible] would have sent the [illegible] up that slope [illegible], General Stark said. Their dead lay as thick as sheep in a fold" for a fourth attack. The Americans, moreover, were hardly even militia. They were as raw and untrained in military drill and knowledge as the same number of men could well be. But even when poorly armed, and with almost every circumstance of war against them, they had twice seen as brave and well disciplined troops as there were in the world break in rout before their flintlock guns. This battle gave the Americans so much courage that they would not turn back. War became inevitable, and with it came independence and the formation of the United States into a nation.

This battle [illegible] to Great Britain losing her richest colonial possession, but it paved the way for a new policy on her part toward dependencies. Never since has she sought to fill the home treasury through colonial taxation, but has pursued a policy of consideration and kindness everywhere that has built up an empire upon which the sun never sets.

THE PERILS OF PAULINE--

Presented by the Hearst Sunday Newspapers in Collaboration with the Famous Pathe Players in a Photo-Play Serial Novel

By Arrangement with the Eclectic Film Company.

SYNOPSIS OF PREVIOUS INSTALMENTS.

Sanford Marvin, a wealthy manufacturer of automobiles, has worn himself out by overwork. His son, Harry, and his adopted daughter, Pauline, love each other but she wants two years of thrilling experiences seeing life before marrying. Her reason is that she is ambitious to be a writer. Old Mr. Marvin asks to see what she has written. While Pauline and Harry are in search of a magazine containing her story, Mr. Marvin opens the case of a mummy which has just arrived from Egypt. Raymond Owen, his rascally private secretary, helps lift off the front of the case, but leaves the old man to remove the mummy's bandages alone. Mr. Marvin, during a fainting spell, sees the half exposed mummy come to life, step out of her case, take a bracelet from her wrist and try to force it into his nerveless grasp, while her lips whisper a strange message from the remote past.

Restored to consciousness by Harry and Pauline, the old man believes it to be a dream until later he finds the identical bracelet on the mummy's skeleton wrist. He promises Pauline one year to see life and places, her in the guardianship of Owen. A final heart attack gives him just time to write on the doctor's prescription blank a brief will. Then he dies. A lawyer tells Owen that he would have permanent charge of Pauline's estate if something should happen to her before marriage. Hicks, a racetrack man, and Owen conspire to kill Pauline. The preceding chapters have dealt with the effort of the two to accomplish this.

In their latest attempt Owen and Hicks, taking advantage of Pauline's adventurous spirit lure her to a balloon ascension and Owen persuades her to enter the basket. After she has done so, a horse hidden by a villainous confederate of the plotters, scatters the crowd about the bag, and the balloon with only Pauline in it, is cast adrift. Harry follows it in a swift auto with Owen and Hicks in another.

The balloon drops down on the edge of the Palisades on the Hudson River, leaving Pauline on an apparently inaccessible ledge. Harry rescues her, but after they have reached the foot of the cliffs the two are set upon by Hicks, masked, who knocks Harry unconscious and kidnaps Pauline. Harry, recovering, again takes up the pursuit. Pauline, locked in an abandoned house by Hicks who then sets it afire. Harry discovers her, drives his auto through the locked doors and rescues Pauline. Pauline then seeks another adventure.

"I tell you, Harry, I can't endure it. I couldn't face anyone I know. I want to run away—far, far away where nobody ever heard of balloons or automobiles, or me."

"Polly, you aren't afraid of a little talk are you? Everyone is saying how brave you were, and, here, when the danger's over, I find you a flimsy little coward!"

She picked up one of a pile of newspapers that lay on the stand beside her, and thrust it before Harry's eyes with a manner at once questioning and rebuking. He read the head lines

SOCIETY GIRL CARRIED OFF IN BALLOON.

Miss Pauline Marvin Has Remarkable Experience After Accident on Palisades.

Harry laughed and patted her hand reassuringly.

PAULINE MARVIN
LOST IN THE SKY

"Can any woman LIVE after that?" she cried.

"Why, it's no crime to be lost in a balloon," said Harry. "See, they tell it just as it was—they make you a real heroine."

"A man might live it down, dear, but a woman, never! To be 'lost in the sky' is altogether too giddy. Margaret!" she called

The maid stepped quickly forward.

"You may pack my things, Margaret, and be sure to put in some warm Winter ones. Is the snow on mountains cold like real snow, or it is like the frosting on cake?" she inquired, turning again to Harry

"What are you up to this time?" he demanded. "Where are you going?"

"Montana, Harry," she proclaimed with a melodramatic flourish. "And if I am followed—by my fame or by my relatives—I shall go on—to the end of the world."

Harry had long ago abandoned the idea of laughing at her whims. Even the most fantastic of her projects was serious to her. And usually she carried them through in spite of reason or ridicule. He merely looked at her in mute suspense awaiting the fall of the blow.

"You needn't begin to see trouble—yet," she laughed. "But I AM going, Harry. I'm going to accept Mary Haines's invitation and visit her and her nice, queer husband on their ranch. You remember Mrs. Haines that dear Western girl that we met on the steamer when she was on her honeymoon."

"Well, it's pretty tough just at this time," objected Harry. "Buisness is bothersome, and I ought to be here; but if you insist"——

"Oh, you're not coming with me," stated Pauline, cheerily. "In the first place you are not invited, and in the second place you are not needed in the least. Now get me a telegraph blank."

He came back with the desired paper and a fountain pen, while he began to shake absent-mindedly over the pale blue covering of the bed.

"Harry!" Pauline's cry brought him back to life. She gazed woefully at a widening black blot on the spread.

"I'm very sorry," he said. "I forgot what I was doing, Polly. I don't think I'll let you go."

"You needn't let me—I'll just GO," she answered, scribbling.

Mrs. Mary Haines, Rockvale, Montana.
Care Double Cross Ranch.

Arrive Thursday at 8 a. m. Will explain haste when I see you.

PAULINE MARVIN.

"Run down and 'phone that to the telegraph office," she told Harry. "And now for the packing, Margaret." She thrust a tiny foot in a pink slipper over the edge of the bed.

"But you are ill, Miss Marvin," protested the nurse with a first faint assertion of authority.

"That's so," said Polly. "How can we get around that? Oh, yes; it's time for your airing, dear—and when you come back I shall be well—and packed."

"Plenty of air," suggested Harry sarcastically from the doorway, "if it takes you as long to pack it as it does to put on your hat."

Pauline flung him a laughing grimace and he strode off to the library.

As he was repeating the brief message to the telegraph office he did not hear the light footfalls that ceased at the library door, nor could he see the drawn, gray face of Owen peering at him. Owen heard the message spoken over the telephone, and was passing up the stairs with his slow, dignified tread when Harry came into the hall.

"Good morning, Mr. Harry. I hope you are quite yourself again. Yesterday was a terrible day."

"You do look done up," retorted Harry courtly, as he picked up his hat and went out.

Owen's step was not slow nor dignified after the door shut upon Harry. He sprang up the last stairs and into his own room.

Here on a small writing desk was another telephone. He snatched it up nervously and gave the call number of the place where he had held his first conference with Hicks on the morning of the preceding day.

He held a brief conversation over the wire, snapped down the receiver, sprang to a wardrobe for his hat and stick and hurried from the house.

The dullness that a sleepless night had left in his eyes had disappeared. The fear that had shaken him ever since the uncanny reappearance of Harry and Pauline was dissipated, or at least concealed by a new hope—a new plan of destruction.

It was not a definite plan as yet. He knew only that Pauline was going away and that she must be followed—no matter whither her whims might lead. His step was brisk, his mind alert as he entered the dark back room of Hicks's West Side rendezvous.

Hicks was there, seated in a corner drinking whiskey and water in the slow steady, unceasing manner that marks the dangerous drinker. He was plainly in a black mood, and Owen saw it.

"You got a pretty fat roll yesterday Hicks. But," Owen drew out his wallet "here is a little. Get yourself ready to make a trip to-morrow. I'll let you know the time and the train."

Hicks looked covetously at the bills, but he demurred: "You mean we're after them so—AGAIN!"

"Hicks, we must be after them—because one of them will soon be after us."

"Where they goin' now?"

"Rockvale, Montana. That is, the girl's going. What I haven't found out yet is whether Harry goes, too. If he stays here I'll stay, and you'll go West."

"After Pauline?"

"Ahead of her!"

"And then what?"

"Then you'll have to use your own judgment. It is an out of the way place—on the edge of the mountains. You'll find some able citizens as rough as the country. They'll help you—at a price. Of course, what we want is to get her hidden, and kept [illegible]. Don't get excited and kill her. Hi[illegible]"

He accompanied the sharp warning with the alleviating roll of yellowbacks, which Hicks quickly deposited in an inside pocket.

"I'll meet you here to-morrow, then?" he said.

"Yes. You['ll] be here at the same time—and you'll be sober."

The next morning they shook hands at the gate of the Pennsylvania station. Hicks, looking a bit uncomfortable but much improved, in a suit of new clothes, and carrying a suit case, hurried to catch the flyer for the West. Owen moved slowly back through the bustling throng.

A few hours later he was wishing a happy journey to Pauline at the same station rail. For some reason he left Pauline and Harry there, as he had left Hicks. He did not wish to go home with Harry—alone.

Mary Haines stood in the low doorway of the Double Cross ranch house and gazed down the sun-baked road to where, in the far distance, a little wisp of dust was visible to her fine clear eyes.

Laughing, she turned and called to someone inside the house. A towering, slow-moving but quick-eyed man, in a flannel shirt, with corduroys tucked into the tops of spurred boots, appeared on the stoop. Hal Haines was so tall that his broad-brimmed hat grazed the porch roof of the house he had built for himself.

"Hal! Hal!" she cried eagerly. "What do you think? Pauline Marvin is coming to visit us. Pauline Marvin!"

"The little girl we met on the ship—that I had to yarn to about the wild West?"

"Yes, of course. How you DID lie to her! Goodness, I hope that's not why she's coming. She'll be awfully disappointed."

"Oh, I don't know as it's necessary to disappoint her," said Haines. "If the State of Montana don't know how to entertain a lady from the East as she likes to be entertained it's time to quit bein' a State at all."

"Hal! (Mrs. Haines was eyeing her husband sternly) I want you to remember who Pauline Marvin is. I'm not going to have her frightened by any of your wild jokes."

Haines burst into a ringing laugh.

"Honest, my dear, I promised that young lady if she ever came to Rockvale she'd see all the Wild West I told her about. I gave her my word. You don't want to make me out a liar, do you?"

"I want you to explain to her in a dignified way and ask her pardon. You can say that conditions have changed greatly in the last two years."

"Oh, come, just one little hold-up—the day she gets here. She'll think it's great. She'll think she's the lost heiress that was carried off in the mountains—the one I told her about."

"I tell you I will NOT hear a word of it. She may be ill or something; it would scare her to death."

"I'll ask her if she's ill before I let the boys rob the buck-board. What d'ye say mother? Just this once."

His boyish joy in the prank brought laughter to her eyes. And although she raised a warning finger, he knew that his sins would be condoned.

On the evening of the fourth day after the arrival of the momentous telegram at the Haines ranch, a [illegible] passenger alighted from a lumbering local train at Rockvale station.

The passenger was a heavily built, sharp-featured man of middle age, who looked as far from home in his excellent clothes as the clothes looked far from home in Rockvale. He made an inquiry of a man on the platform, and, carrying a heavy suitcase, slouched up the main street of the town with the unmistakable gait of Hicks.

"Ham Dalton's place was the one the man had directed him to, and Hicks, after engaging the best rooms in the house for seventy-five cents, scrubbed a little of the dust of travel from his person and went down to the bar and gambling room. The drink of whiskey he got made even his trained throat writhe, and he strolled over to the poker table to join a group of calm and plainly-armed spectators of high play. From the conversation he picked up the news of Rockvale. He learned that the dam at Red Gut was washed out; that Case Egan, a noted rancher, was in jail for shooting a deputy sheriff, and that Hal Haines was expecting a "millionairess gal visitor from New York."

"To-morra's express."

"Sence when did the express stop at Rockvale?"

"Sence the president o' the road told it to stop for this here young person," replied the informant crushingly.

Hicks was scanning the faces of the men about him with a purposeful eye. Especially he watched one—a lean man in red shirt and leather breeches, booted and spurred, who stood near the table.

Hicks approached him. "Hello Patten," he said.

The man whirled so sharply that the revolver he had drawn in whirling caught in Hick's coat and jerked him into the middle of the room. The poker game went on without a sound or sign of interruption. The bartender took a casual look at Hicks and the gunman, then went on talking to a customer [illegible] more.

"Hello, Hicks," said Patten, putting up the gun. "I'm much obliged that I didn't kill you. We don't greet old friends so hasty out here, boy, as you do in New York, especially when we haven't heard our right name in some years," he added in a lowered voice.

"How long have you been here, Pat?" asked Hicks.

"Eight—nine—twelve years; ever since that friend of yours, Mr. Owen, paid me $10,000 for getting rid of a certain—what he called a certain obstacle."

"Which you didn't get rid of?

"No, he made the mistake of paying me in advance, and it didn't seem necessary to harm anybody."

"Got any of the money left?"

The lean gunman held his head back and guffawed. "It's near here, I guess, but it ain't mine. It dropped between this bar and that table," he said.

"Do you want a little job?" asked Hicks. "But let's go in the back room."

They strolled into an empty [illegible] room, and ordered drinks.

"What kind of a job?" asked Patten.

Hicks leaned across the table and whispered rapidly. His old acquaintance drew back, with a sudden suspicion.

He produced $5,000 in bills from his trousers pocket, but secreted it again quickly as the waiter appeared.

Patten got up and sauntered out into the barroom, returning presently with three men of his own brand—broad [illegible] grim-eyed ruffians of the far north country—three of Case Egan's [illegible].

There were drinks and the stripping of the outer covering of Hicks's roll before the party broke up.

The Double Cross Ranch had been the scene of a riot of preparation for four days but the climax was reached on the morning of Pauline's arrival.

Mrs. Haines was flustered not only by the prospect of meeting her distinguished friend, but by the tumultuous staging of the great hold-up scene that was to mark Pauline's welcome. Hal had been up at 3 o'clock in the morning rehearsing the boys in their parts. He had set off at 5 o'clock for the station.

As Pauline, trim in her travelling suit of gray and blithe in the clear Western air, tripped from the express, all Rockvale was there to meet her. Hal Haines, mighty man that he was in the region, was red with pride as the girl who could stop the express at Rockvale gave him her hand in happy greeting.

As he helped her into the two-seated buckboard, no one in the crowd noticed the man who had arrived the night before standing on the platform and pointing out the girl to Tom Patten. But Patten was seen to mount and ride rapidly away.

"I hope you saved some of that lovely Wild West for me, Mr Haines," said Pauline, as the finest pair of horses in the Double Cross stable whisked them along the road to the ranch.

At a bend in the road five masked and mounted men had dashed from cover and quickly surrounded the buckboard with a small circlet of levelled gun-barrels.

Pauline had time to cry out only once before she felt herself gripped by powerful hands and dragged from the wagon seat where Hal Haines sat shaking like a leaf. Hal Haines was shaking with laughter, not fear. He stood up and started to draw his revolver slowly. From behind him a lasso was thrown lightly and the noose tightened around his arms.

He kept on laughing, although he was a little afraid the boys were overdoing matters in regard to the guest. He knew his wife would never forgive him for this actual kidnapping of Pauline. [illegible] certainly had never intended it.

And she was really frightened. He could tell that by her cries as she was thrust across the pommel of the masked leader's horse and the horse was spurred to a tearing gallop down the road.

Haines tried to shout a command and call the joke off, but the riders had all followed after their leader, and he was alone in the buckboard. The team had strayed to the side of the road and commenced to graze.

"And they needn't have been so realistic with their knots," he said, as he struggled to free himself of the rope.

It was ten minutes before he wriggled free. He picked up the lines and drove on toward the ranch—a little nervous now over the reception he would get, but still laughing.

At the fork where the road to the mountains left the main highway, Haines flashed out his revolver in real excitement. Another group of five masked men had come [illegible] their horses out of a clump of small trees. They fired their revolvers as they surrounded the buckboard. Then suddenly discovering that there was no woman passenger, they tore off their masks and came up with quick, eager inquiries.

Hal Haines turned pale. Perhaps for the first time in his life the big fellow knew what fear was—not fear for himself, but for another.

"Boys, there was another party on the road. They took her. I took 'em for you," he said in a stifled voice. "Come on. Cabot, give me your horse; take the rig back and tell Mrs Haines."

His long, lithe form swung into the saddle, and, filling their revolvers as they rode, the band of jesters, who had suddenly turned so grimly serious, dashed back toward town.

Two miles from where Tom Patten had swung Pauline to his saddle bow they picked up the train hoofs that left the road and made toward the mountains.

The men who had set out so gayly a few hours before rode silently, fiercely now. Mile after mile swept behind them as they held to the trail. Sometimes it followed the roads, sometimes it broke over open country. It reached the hills and at last the [illegible]. It stopped at the river.

Patten [illegible] had ridden in the water up [illegible]. A [illegible] the leader ordered [illegible] on the south side. They [illegible] rode five miles across country [illegible] separated, each taking a different route. [illegible] and one companion kept on—with [illegible].

"Here we are," said Patten. His companion [illegible] and lifted Pauline from the [illegible] saddle.

With a swift and daring dexterity, born of fear, [illegible] flung aside his arms and sprang toward the horse he had just left. She tried [illegible] her strength was gone; they were [illegible] her. She was seized and ar[illegible].

She flung herself from the log and knelt [illegible] her captors, pleading piteously. They [illegible] bound her feet and led her [illegible] she [illegible] the giant stone was rolled back into its place and she was [illegible] in darkness.

Patten's companion removed [illegible] mask and mopped his brow [illegible] it. It was the seamed, squat brow of Hicks.

Silly Season Statements By Winthrop Ames Must Not Cause Alarm

Critic Takes Up Issue With Producer Who Says Hub is the Worst Theatre Town in the Couutry

By FREDERICK JOHNS.

Winthrop Ames was quoted the other day as saying that Boston was the worst theatre town of its size in the country, and that our people prefer bad plays to good ones, and cheap musical comedies to high-class pieces.

We all say things occasionally we don't really mean, and Mr. Ames is probably no better than the rest of us. It happens that he has been associated with a number of plays that did not win great success in Boston, and he condemns us for that reason

It is a fact that some plays highly praised by the drama leagues of various places have not distinguished themselves in Boston, while attractions which were compelled to do without the highbrow label have succeeded.

As this is the silly season, let us discuss what constitutes a good play It seems to me that three things are essential—a strong plot, a good dramatic style and an attractive subject.

Many of the most cultured patrons of the drama are content with the second essential, and more demand the first two. I think some of Mr. Ames' plays have had powerful plots and have been well written. I think those which possessed all three of the essentials I have named have succeded, but most of them did not because they did not deal with an attractive subject.

What is an attractive subject?

An attractive subject is something that attracts. If it doesn't interest and draw the public, it is not attractive It may be many other things that are nice, but it is not attractive

Theer is a very small select public in Boston and in other cities which likes different things than the masses If Mr Ames insists upon addressing these people he must not complain if the rest of the public does not come at his call.

The goodness or badness of a play is a matter of opinion. In Boston Mr. Ames appears to have been on the wrong side of the fence, and we are sorry

◆ ◆ ◆ ◆

There have been other purveyors of good plays with us this season who do not agree with Mr. Ames. There is Edgar Selwin, proprietor of "Under Cover," which commences its twenty-sixth week tomorrow night.

Mr Selwyn thinks Boston a very excellent and discriminating city.

What is the secret of the success of "Under Cover"?

Why, it is a good strong play pointed at the popular taste, which is not necessarily bad It is a well-acted play Its subject is fascinating and attractive It is couched in terse, realistic dialogue Its people are human and they are mixed up in exciting events

I suppose Bernard Shaw is the most satisfying dramatist of the day to our super-cultured theatregoers Shaw has been before the public for many years, but he hasn't yet discovered how to make his characters human beings

I had the pleasure, within a few weeks, of seeing his latest and in many respects his greatest play, "Pygmalion," which was superbly acted by Sir Herbert Tree and Mrs Patrick Campbell at His Majesty's Theatre, London.

Shaw, the brilliant essayist, the writer of marvellous dialogue, the composer of strange theories, the master humorist, has tried harder than ever before to write a real play He has conceived amazing situations, builded extraordinary characters, but he has failed to breathe the breath of life into his puppets, and has not succeeded in writing a love scene that would convince a cash girl in a department store that real people were opening their souls before her.

"Pygmalion" is interesting, amusing and enjoyable, but it is not sincere nor realistic, and therefore not a good play.

When such a play draws a large patronage it is fortunate for the producer and the author, but no testimonial to the discrimination of the public. The popularity of George Bernard Shaw in the theatre is far beyond his deserts.

I have never seen a good play by Shaw. His brilliancy, humor and eccentricity repay me in large part for sitting through pieces in which humanity, sincerity and dramatic force are totally lacking.

◆ ◆ ◆ ◆

Let us consider Richard Strauss. Here is a man with a marvellous command of the resources of modern music, and an ingenuity in orchestration which is almost diabolical. A new Strauss music drama is the sensation of the season, despite the fact that he has never written a music drama that contained the elements of success.

Strauss has written for the stage "Fearsnot," "Salome," "Elektra," "Rose Cavalier" and "Ariadne of Naxos."

Every one of these is a failure. Several are ghastly failures. "Salome" alone contains ideas that are worth anything And yet I suppose that Strauss has made more money out of these failures than Verdi did out of his marvellous masterpieces. Furthermore, the world is now agog over his latest atrocity, a ballet entitled "Joseph and His Brethren," which was given at the Paris Opera a few weeks ago, and which I was persuaded to see and hear.

◆ ◆ ◆ ◆

Curious how the public mind works. The Boston Opera Company has had a hard row to hoe in this city, but now it has gone to Paris and is really making an amazing artistic and financial success there The approval of the Parisians has evidently convinced many Boston people who didn't have confidence in the evidence of their own eyes and ears that the Boston Opera Company must be something very remarkable, for they are hastening to add themselves to the subscription lists for next season.

Thus the Paris season will have the effect of greatly increasing the Boston subscriptions.

The same performance over which Paris has gone mad caused little excitement hereabouts the past Winter "Otello" was one of the least popular works in the repertory. Now that Paris has acclaimed it, we are to open our season next year with it. Ferrari Fontana the new tenor, was admired by the intelligent Boston subscribers, but he was powerless to attract the general public. Next season I suppose he will be a drawing card. And so it goes. It is human nature to like what you have better if you see somebody for whose opinion you have respect admiring it, and such is evidently the case with our opera

BILLS AT THE PLAYHOUSES

Keith's Theatre.

George Bickel and Harry Watson, for years the star comedians of Florenz Ziegfeld's annual "Follies" productions, will make their first vaudeville appearance at B. F. Keith's Theatre next week at the head of one of the strongest comedy shows of the season. Bickel and Watson and their famous rube band are a classic in American fun. At B F Keith's Theatre they will present an entirely new act written especially for them, bristling with fun and novelties. Another splendid novelty will be the appearance of "Consul" and "Lady Betty," two of the most remarkable chimpanzees ever seen upon a stage. These animals are nearer to the human being than any creature the animal kingdom ever produced. They perform the most incredible stunts, and their act is full of surprises. It appeals especially to the children. Still another strong comedy feature will be Callahan and Mack in their Irish comedy classic, "The Auld Neighborhood" These two comedians are without a peer in their line. After being separated for several years, they have again joined hands, and Mr Callahan will be seen in his famous impersonation of the old Irishman with Mr Mack as the jovial youngster who delights to tease the old man

Colonial Theatre.

Commencing tomorrow night, "The Misleading Lady" starts its seventh week at the Colonial Theatre. Headed by Lewis S. Stone and Miss Grace Barbour, this excellent company has at each performance played the season's most unusual comedy to hilarious houses. It is doubtful indeed if a funnier play than this latest contrivance of Goddard and Dickey has been seen in the last fifteen years. Mr. William Harris, Jr., produced the play and proposes to send several companies on the road next season.

Tremont Theatre.

"Neptune's Daughter," the spectacular pictorial production which begins its third week's engagement at the Tremont Theatre on Monday afternoon, has been declared to be the last word in photo play art by those who have attended the performance. The story, written by Captain Leslie T Peacocke, the enchanting scenes afforded by the Bermuda islands with their coral reefs, submarine grottos, semi-tropic verdure, and the vast expanse of the wide Atlantic; the company of over 200 actors, headed by Miss Kellermann, who, aside from her aquatic feats which she has many opportunities to display in this drama proves that she is also a splendid actress, a graceful dancer and an expert swordswoman.

Bowdoin Sq. Theatre.

Violet Mascotte's "40 Merrie Maids" and Catule's living statues will be featured at the Bowdoin Square Theatre this week There will also be a moving picture display of merit in which Mary Pickford is featured A tango contest will be held on Wednesday night and souvenirs of Catherine Crawford will be given away on Thursday night Buck dancing contest Friday night Concert every Sunday night

Loew's St. James.

Bob Archer and Blanche Belford, in a comedy skit, "The Janitor's Troubles," will head the bill the first three days of the week at Marcus Loew's St James Theatre.

A real treat is offered for the last three days, when Doris Vernon, a new character star, will appear in a new sketch. Margaret Farrell, a stunning looking girl, late feature of the big Lillian Russell road show will offer some new songs and display of wardrobe. Others will be Marty Ward and Johnny Bohlman, late features with Hurtig and Seaman's "Taxi Girls."

Loew's Orpheum Theatre.

Doris Vernon, a newly discovered star, who proved a big hit when featured for the first time in New York recently, will head the bill with her company at Marcus Loew's Orpheum Theatre the first three days of the coming week. She will appear in a sketch called "The Finish," written by Billy (Swede) Hall, the protean character actor. Lawrence Crane, "The Irish Wizard," back in America after a world tour, will offer his "Den of Mystery" Joyce and West, two of the best exhibition dancers in New York will also be on the bill

three days of the week

Norumbega Park.

This week at Norumbega Park the theatrical attraction will be Mat Ott's latest musical comedy, Seven Reasons Why," dealing with the reasons why a man should marry and should not marry. This farce is replete with many catchy songs of the whistleable kind, pretty girls in swagger costumes, and the whole makes up a laughing, happy entertainment. On June 17 the Marlboro Brass Band will conduct concerts before and after the theatre performances, in the Band Court. The Zoological Gardens continue to be the mecca for thousands. The cooling breezes from the Charles River make the Grape Arbor Cafe an ideal place to dine Tonight—a grand concert.

Lexington Park.

During these balmy June days an outing to Lexington Park, Greater Boston's finest amusement resort, affords an ideal afternoon or evening's entertainment. Tonight in the Rustic Theatre an excellent Sunday concert has been arranged with some new motion pictures. This week the management will inaugurate the afternoon performances. A special holiday program has been arranged, with some well-known favorites on the bill. Automobilists will find a well conducted garage for the storage of their machines while visiting the park Dansants are given every Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday evening in the famous open-air dance hall.

Paragon Park.

Manager George A. Dodge has made special preparations for the entertainment of his patrons at Paragon Park for today and the coming week, which will include extra holiday attractions for Wednesday, Bunker Hill Day, June 17. The cabaret features tonight will include many of the old favorites, and a special added attraction for the coming week, beginning today, will be Amanda Gray and her two escorts, known as the Elks trio Miss Gray was the prima donna of the Weber & Fields show recently seen at the Boston Theatre and the young men with her were also in that company.

In the free open-air circus today will be seen Tate and Tate, the English aerial wonders, and Mlle. Frances Touraine, a Parisian wonder in acrobatic poses

The cabaret continues to be a popular feature in the Palm Garden every evening, but it has a strong rival in the Palm Garden Dansants which continue from 4 30 to 5 30, 6 30 to 8 30 and from 9 to 11 p m., under the direction of Miss Jean Thompson and Raymond McKey, the New York society dancing favorites, who give a fine exhibition of the modern dances.

Bass Point and Nahant.

So great has been the traffic on the Bass Point and Nahant line since the opening of the season that one boat has been inadequate to care for the throngs of excursionists that would desire to take this picturesque harbor trip, hence the addition of the other boat of this line, the Machigonne, which, with the General Lincoln will provide ample accommodations for the regular daily traffic. On Saturdays, Sundays and holidays, however, it will be necessary to add still another boat, the Nassau, making a three-boat schedule on these days. This means an hourly service from Otis Wharf.

The schedule of the daily two-boat service from Otis Wharf is as follows. 9 50 and 11 a. m., 12 20, 2 20, 3 30, 5:10, 6 15 and 8 00 p. m. The last boat back to Boston leaves Bass Point at 9.45. There is a half-hourly three-boat schedule in operation between Bass Point and Revere.

Opera Subscription.

The reported engagement of several new artists, who have made such noted success with the Boston Opera Company's present season of grand opera in Paris, for the season of 1914-15 at the Boston Opera House, has notably increased the sales in the subscription department here, and the management of the Boston Opera House wish to call the attention of intending subscribers to the necessity of subscribing early in order to obtain their desired location of seats. The demand has been so great that there are but few remaining seats to be had in the lower priced sections. As a deposit of but 25 per cent. of the entire subscription price is required it would be well to enter one's subscription now before leaving town for the Summer's vacation The balance of 75 per cent. is not due until late Fall The box office is open daily from 10 until 3, except Sunday. Seat diagrams can be seen and all information gladly given.

Provincetown Trips.

Yesterday a crowd that filled the steamer Dorothy Bradford of the Cape Cod Line to its utmost capacity took the first trip of the season from Bay Line Wharf, Atlantic avenue, to Provincetown and return. Altogether a most enjoyable day was spent, and judging from the first day's traffic this line will be more popular than ever this season From the spacious observation decks of this staunch steamer an excellent view of the fortifications and marine activities of Boston harbor may be had and the picturesque seashore scenery is not to be surpassed in New England The steamer Dorothy Bradford leaves today at 9 30 and arrives back at 7 p. m. and on week days it leaves at 9 and arrives back at 6 30 p. m.

Plymouth Theatre.

With an extra matinee next Wednesday, June 17 Bunker Hill Day, "Under Cover" enters upon the twenty-sixth week at the Plymouth Theatre. The play will remain here but a short time longer. In that time, however, it will have achieved the longest run in the theatrical history of Boston. Those who have witnessed this unusual play will agree that it is the sort of play that can be enjoyed in all kinds of weather. The regular matinees are given on Thursday and Saturday

Scollay Square Olympia.

Gordon & Lord's Scollay Square Olympia will offer another attractive bill of high-class vaudeville and feature photo-plays for the coming week. "The Devil's Mate," a novelty dramatic sketch, with special scenery and electrical effects, will be one of the feature acts The piece is presented by a clever company, for the first time here "Big Jim," the turkey trotting bear, will be another head liner Others on the bill are Callouette, juggler, Allen and Frances, singing, talking and acrobatic O'Brien, Dennett and Gosler, and others

Villa Napoli.

In addition to the several high-class cabaret singers that appear at the Villa Napoli, Nantasket, Manager Di Pesa has arranged for other attractive entertainment that is bound to make the coming week a gala week at this famous Summer resort. The daily "dansants," of course, are as popular as ever. There is an enlarged orchestra that furnishes the most appropriate music for the latest dances The list of entertainers for the week includes Stayman and Linden, musical act; Joe Leonardi, monologist; Bessie Warren, Edna Ayers and Ida Gunther.

Nantasket Boats.

With the new service late trips and countless attractions at Nantasket Beach, all records are being broken during the past few Sundays for attendance. There is no better way to rest one's self from the tired strain of the busy city than a cool sea trip on one of the Nantasket Beach steamers. The frequent trips will insure your getting a boat at practically any time, and you will always find plenty of room.

The Plymouth season is now officially open. The steamer Betty Alden is making a trip daily, leaving Rowe's wharf at 10 a m. For entertainment, this year's feature is the Lina Lewis Nautical Orchestra of five young ladies.

Edwardes to Yield Theatrical Sceptre

Famous Manager, Ill, Will Be Succeeded by Gorge Dance.

LONDON, June 1[illegible]—From a trustworthy source the Boston AMERICAN correspondent learned today that at the next meeting of the board of directors of George Edwardes (Ltd.), next week, the man who has held sway over theatrical London for so many years, will formally abdicate his position.

George Dance, hitherto Edwardes' manager for the provincial companies, will succeed him. Mr. Edwardes has long been an invalid, as is generally known, despite the recent statements sent from Badnauheim, where Edwardes is staying at present, that he soon will return to take up the active management of his affairs.

Those closest in touch with the concern have taken for granted that when Edwardes formally retired his mantle would fall on the shoulders of J. A. E. Malone, who has been Edwardes' general manager for years.

'Neptune's Daughter' Described in Verse

The press agent of "Neptune's Daughter" at the Tremont Theatre found a book of poems the other day and opened it to "The Palms." It struck him at once that the verses described the scenes in which Annette Kellermann, the popular mermaid, was disporting when the films for "Neptune's Daughter" were made. Here are the lines:

Go where the branching coral hives
Unending strife of endless lives,
Where, leagued about the 'wildered boat
The rainbow jellies fill and float;
And, lilting where the laver lingers,
The star-fish trips on all her fingers;
Where, 'neath his myriad spines ashock,
The sea-egg ripples down the rock;
An orange wonder dimly guessed,
From darkness where the cuttles rest,
Moored o'er the darker deeps that hide,
The blind white sea-snake and his bride;
Who, drowsing, nose the long-lost ships
Let down through darkness to their lips.

Mrs. Woods Makes Debut This Week

Now in Vaudeville After Winning Fame as a Contralto.

Edith MacGregor Woods, who makes her vaudeville debut at B. F Keith's Theatre this week, is one of the best known and most popular contraltos in Greater Boston.

Mrs. Woods, who has been doing concert work and singing in opera since she was fifteen years old, is known to thousands all over New England through her work with Mary Howe of Brattleboro. She has sung at Scotch concerts in all the larger cities of New England, and was formerly soloist with Dr. de Normandie's Eliot Square Unitarian Church at Dudley street. She is now soloist at the Unitarian Church at Meeting House Hill.

While Mrs. Woods is best known to the people of Greater Boston through her church and concert work, she has also sung in grand opera. Mrs Woods sang "Siebel" with J. K. Murray and Clara Lane in the Castle Square Opera Company production of "Faust," and also sang "Martha" with Mme. Sembrich at the Boston Theatre She stepped into the latter part at less than twenty-four hours notice The artist cast for the role was taken ill the Friday night before the performance. It was impossible to secure a singer from New York, and Mrs. Woods, who although familiar with the role in English, had never sung it in Italian, learned the part over night, and sang the role at a Saturday afternoon performance following.

Mrs Woods is best known as an interpreter of Scotch folk songs and ballads She will offer a number of these selections at B F Keith's Theatre this week.

Notable Nights at the Pop Concerts

The Pops at Symphony Hall enters the last three weeks of their season tomorrow evening and Clement Lenom will be the conductor. Mr. Lenom, who made his first appearance as a pop conductor last year, showed that he was not only a leader of much skill but is happy in his selection of programs

The last three Monday nights of the season will be notable. Tomorrow night, June 15, will be the annual celebration of Boston College and in the intermissions the glee clubs are to sing several numbers under the direction of Thomas J Hurley The program, which includes a few Boston College numbers also has on it much attractive music, and a large attendance is assured.

Wednesday evening, July 1, has been set aside as "Request Night. Mr Lenom has received already a large number of requests for pieces to be placed on this program and the public is reminded that Wednesday, June 24, is the last day on which requests can be received.

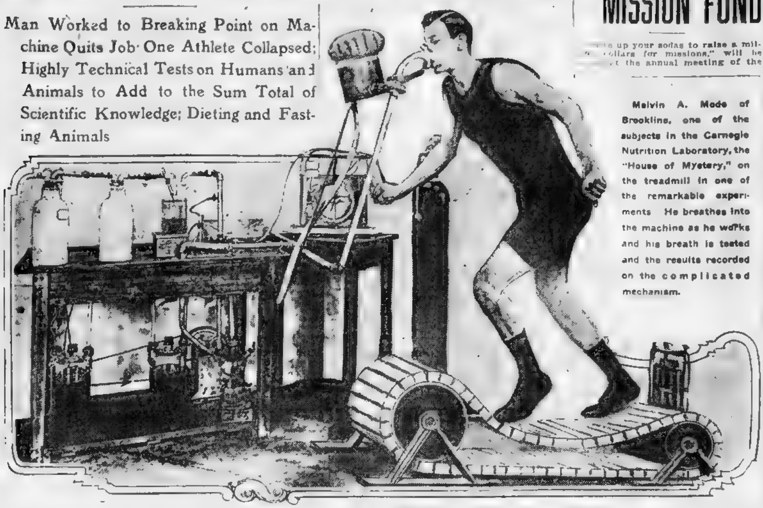
Strange Tests Made in "House of Mystery"

PRETTY GIRLS TAKE PULSE OF GEESE, RABBITS AND SUCH ★ HUMAN SUBJECTS WORK LIKE MAD MEN ON EMPTY STOMACHS

Bicycle Rider Describes Weird Ordeals

Man Worked to Breaking Point on Machine Quits Job: One Athlete Collapsed; Highly Technical Tests on Humans and Animals to Add to the Sum Total of Scientific Knowledge; Dieting and Fasting Animals



Melvin A. Mode of Brookline, one of the subjects in the Carnegie Nutrition Laboratory, the "House of Mystery," on the treadmill in one of the remarkable experiments. He breathes into the machine as he works and his breath is tested and the results recorded on the complicated mechanism.

More light on Andrew Carnegie's "House of Mystery" in the Fenway.

Ordinary people, who occupy flats and lodgings out that way, who are chiefly interested in their jobs, their pay envelope and the standing of the Red Sox and the Braves, call it the "House of Mystery" because they don't understand what is going on in the place.

Scientifically speaking, it is the Nutrition Laboratory at Boston of the Carnegie Institute of Washington. It is just back of the Harvard Medical School.

It is an experiment station, where highly technical tests are made on humans and animals, with a view of adding to the sum of beneficial human knowledge.

Queer "stunts" they do out there, to the everyday mind.

They put a man on a stationary bicycle and make him ride a "century run"—or its equivalent—before breakfast.

They walk him on a treadmill. He walks and walks and trots and trots, until he is ready to collapse. Sometimes he does.

Meanwhile the subject breathes every now and then into a "Universal respiration" apparatus. His breath is measured.

Girl attaches take the respiration of animals, like rabbits and geese. Fancy a golden-haired girlie solemnly taking a goose's respiration.

Then they diet the animals, to fit them for the experiments. They "fast" them and feed them as they will.

One goose died from overfeeding, the scientific signals having apparently become crossed. The clerk of the institution, being a practical man, took the goose home and roasted it for dinner, thus avoiding the waste of good material which science abhors.

It was at the Nutrition Laboratory that Dr. Agostino Levanzin underwent prolonged fasting, or "starvation," as it was called, about four years ago.

They "fasted" the doctor to the point where a human being will almost commit murder for a ham sandwich.

Melvin A. Mode of Brookline, a bicycle rider and occasional paid subject at the Nutrition Laboratory, came to the Sunday AMERICAN office this week and told about the "Century run" on an empty stomach, the eternal treadmill walking, the tale of the unfortunate "goosie" and other entertaining things.

Mode is through as a subject of such scientific experiments.

"Never again," is his declaration.

"It's too hard," said Mode, "they don't pay enough for the work or for the risk you run of dropping dead or having an artery burst. Seems to me that an institute controlled by a man so rich as Andrew Carnegie ought to pay its subjects more. And I was about the best paid one there at that. There are few who can undergo their experiments."

PRAISE FOR MODE.

They do not seem to value Mode at the Laboratory. In the voluminous report made of one of the experiments the professors say in the preface:

"The extraordinary interest and fidelity to the routine exhibited on the part of the professional subject, Mr. Melvin A. Mode, should not pass without special comment. It would have been impossible to conduct a series of experiments of this type without the intelligent co-operation of the subject."

The report makes no bones, either, about telling how hard some of the tests are. For instance, one time when Mode was put on the stationary bicycle, the following happened:

"One record of the pulse-rate made during the work showed 118 beats per minute. Soon after the period began the subject looked flushed, a few minutes afterward he perspired freely, and at 11:25 a. m. (twenty minutes after beginning) he was obliged to discontinue his efforts, as he was on the point of collapse.

"IN APPEARANCE HE WAS WILD AND SCARED, HIS FACE WAS PALLID, HIS MOUTH TWITCHING AND HE HAD LOST CONTROL OF HIS MUSCLES, BEING UNABLE TO GRASP THE HANDLE BARS OR TO SPEAK WHEN HE STOPPED."

SUBJECT COLLAPSED.

But another subject did collapse, science having given him what pugilists term the "knock out." He was pedalling away for dear life. His pulse, which was doing very nicely at 122 (normal being 72) suddenly bounced up to 184 per minute. He collapsed. He became "pallid," was as the report adds, "almost cyanotic," [illegible] sort of blue-colored from lack of circulation.

So it isn't "all skittles and beer," as the old saying goes, to be a paid subject at the Nutrition Laboratory, even if you are vigorous enough to qualify for a job.

"I was there five months for the bicycle riding," said Mode, "but I didn't live there. I came day times. They had sent for me to work for them because I was a bicycle rider. They had Nat Butler, the racer, riding for them out in their New Jersey experiment station. They want men who have endurance.

"I can't tell all about their apparatus because it's too scientific and I don't pretend to understand it. And they wouldn't tell me anything. They said 'Oh, you wouldn't understand if we told you,' which is true enough, I guess.

RODE FOR FIFTEEN MINUTES.

"The first day I rode the bicycle about fifteen minutes. And my pulse shot up to [illegible] beats a minute. This was twelve hours after eating, mind you. I had supper the night before, but no breakfast. They wouldn't let me eat any breakfast. They would test me to see if I had eaten. They said they could tell. But I never did eat breakfast. I did as they wanted me to.

"This bicycle riding was increased from day to day until finally I rode about four and one-half hours. But this wasn't like riding an ordinary wheel. They had a brake on it to put on a 'strain' as they called it. And then there was the breathing apparatus.

"The book they wrote about it calls this the 'universal respiration' apparatus. The description says that the 'subject' breathes through a mouthpiece into a current of air passing through a pipe system. The expired air is forced by a rotary blower through sulphuric acid and soda lime to remove respectively carbon dioxide and water. The carbon dioxide absorbers may be weighed. Measured amounts of oxygen from a cylinder are passed through an accurate meter and introduced as needed.'

"I'd put the mouthpiece of the respirator in my mouth and breathe in and out of that. I had a clothespin to pinch my nostrils together. But I didn't use the respirator all the time. I couldn't have stood it. I would use it fifteen minutes, while riding. Then they would take it off for ten minutes. Then I use it fifteen minutes and lay off with it ten, and so on.

EXPERIMENT SPOILED.

"Once the respirator went wrong and some sulphuric acid fumes from it worked back to my mouth and most choked me. The professor in charge, a German doctor, was angry. He said the experiment was spoiled. I guess it was."

His treadmill work was even more novel than his bicycle riding, according to Mode's description. He says:

"I've just come off the threadmill. I hired on for it the first of [illegible] and did it three months, living at home and going to the laboratory at times. This threadmill is an endless flat belt, about two feet wide, running over two drums or rollers six feet apart, with smaller rollers under the top of the belt, where I walked, to make it stay level. It is run by electricity.

"I used the breathing machine, the same as when riding the bicycle. They simply put the treadmill in place of the bicycle, but I was walking, not riding.

"I would get on the treadmill and put the breathing mouthpiece in place. Then the doctor would switch on the electric current, and the treadmill would begin to travel. I would begin walking at the same time breathing in and out of the breathing machine.

"I would walk fifteen minutes at first. Then it would be increased a little each day. At the last I walked five hours as fast as I could walk or trot rather.

HARDER THAN RIDING.

"Hard? You bet. It was even harder than the bicycle riding. They figured I walked over [illegible] steps in that last five hours of going.

"One day I did try to fool them. I wanted to quit early to go somewhere. So at the end of an hour or so I told the doctor I had to stop, that I was tired [illegible]. He wouldn't let me. He simply said 'No, you are not exhausted or even tired. I can tell by your pulse and by the color of your lips. Keep on.' So I did. I wasn't tired. I knew it, and he knew it, and I knew that he knew it. You can't fool those fellows. They're too scientific.

"But I forgot [illegible] before I went on the treadmill every day I would be put in the [illegible]. The [illegible] first floor. A calorimeter [illegible] is about seven feet long [illegible] feet high and three feet wide. You lie on a bed [illegible] is sealed with wax. You inhale oxygen, and the amount of carbonic oxide you exhale [illegible]—is registered. You have to lie still as a mouse [illegible] or you'll spoil the experiment.

"When I was walking the treadmill the [illegible] string attached to my belt [illegible] going up and over [illegible] then down to a machine [illegible] table for recording the amount [illegible] weight lifted in certain [illegible] raised up [illegible] steps the string [illegible] indicator on the [illegible] kept making a jag [illegible] chart. In this way [illegible] walking [illegible] simply one of the dozen [illegible] measurements and records they [illegible].

MEASURED HIS BREATH.

"They [illegible] measured my breath. They [illegible]. They took my [illegible]. They even photographed [illegible]. All these records were [illegible] to be worked up into [illegible] made part of the big [illegible] on the experiments."

[illegible] the laboratory staff, [illegible] must be fifty people in that [illegible] including Dr. Francis G. Benedict in charge. There are [illegible] doctors and fifteen [illegible] stenographers, girls and others.

"They have rabbits and geese [illegible] rooms on the third [illegible]. I didn't see or hear of [illegible] section. They seemed to be [illegible] respiration of the geese [illegible] more than anything else. [illegible] made a mistake and [illegible] goose and it died and the [illegible] took it home and roasted it [illegible]."

[illegible] is most businesslike, [illegible] finding, Mode says. The [illegible] is no home of romance, [illegible] that he could see, and Dan [illegible] has no chance there. If Cupid [illegible] mistake and tried to [illegible] a love affair between one [illegible] goose-girls and one of the [illegible] probably the doctors would get [illegible] and make him walk the [illegible] for five hours, or put him in [illegible] calorimeter and leave him there.

TOO MUCH WORK, HE SAYS.

"[illegible] contract there is ended and [illegible] going back for more. The [illegible] apparatus is called an ergo[illegible] or instrument for measuring [illegible] much work," says Melvin A. Mode.

The laboratory report on the bicycle tests is entitled "Muscular Work. A Metabolic Study With Special Reference to the Efficiency of the Human Body as a Machine."

The tests are made, the records [illegible] and results tabulated in earnest scientific effort to find out the mechanical efficiency of the human body and the best way of attaining great efficiency.

BAPTISTS OUT FOR $1,000,000 MISSION FUND

"Give up your sodas to raise a million dollars for missions," will be [illegible] at the annual meeting of the Women's American Baptist Missionary Society in the First Baptist Church, Commonwealth avenue, Tuesday at 10 a. m. More than one thousand women delegates will take part in this gathering to answer the slogan.

"A Million Dollars for Missions for the Baptist Women of America."

The women of the society support [illegible] missionaries, 386 native Bible women, 1,000 schools and nine hospitals.

Mrs. Carrie Robinson, secretary of the home department, whose headquarters are at the Ford Building, said:

"We want every Baptist woman in the United States to give up one glass of soda water weekly and give its price to the cause of missions. If you don't drink soda water, why, give up some dainty that has cost you five cents a week and help along the increasing demands of missions. There are about 600,000 Baptist women in America that must hear this call to give up some dainty every week and send the price of it to the treasurer of our mission society, Miss Alice E. Stedman, No. 15 Ashburton place.

"We are going to arouse the women of America at our annual meeting next Tuesday in Boston. We expect that every woman delegate present will take up the cry for missions, so that this one million may be raised in one year.

"It can be done. All it needs is to give up one soda, or five cents' worth of candy every week, or something that you absolutely do not need."

Mrs. M. Grant Edmands of No. 16 Devon road, Chestnut Hill, is president of the society. Mrs. Henry Peabody of Beverly is foreign vice-president and Mrs. H. G. Safford, No. 13 Ashburton place, is corresponding secretary for the foreign department.

This meeting of the women is one of the introductory meetings of the Northern Baptist convention which will be held June 17-25, in Tremont Temple.

Mrs. "Pat" Campbell Plays Here Next Fall

LONDON, June 13.—New Yorkers will see Mrs. Patrick Campbell in Bernard Shaw's play, "Pygmalion," next Autumn.

The New York American correspondent is assured that the noted actress has obtained the American rights to the play and has arranged, almost secretly, with the Shuberts to appear in it under her management.

Sir Beerbohm Tree, who plays the lead here, says he knows nothing of Mrs. "Pat's" plan to take the company to New York, but it is understood the announcement is delayed until the current production at His Majesty's Theatre ends.

Plea for Freshmen at Wellesley

The WELLESLEY COLLEGE NEWS, the student weekly, makes a vigorous editorial plea in its current issue for greater use of "raw material" next year in student activities.

By this is meant assigning committee work not to girls who have done it from year to year and gained all the experience, but to Freshmen and Sophomores who are willing but untried.

The NEWS maintains there is a constant tendency to centre the class duties, committee work and so on on the comparatively small group of experienced workers.

North Shore Becomes Real Honeymoon Land This Season

There is to be a gay and interesting little colony of brides on the North Shore this season, and that naturally means that there will be [illegible] times, for with brides entertaining is a decidedly necessary [illegible] of their Summer program. Each will likely try to outdo the [illegible] hospitalities the largest and most interesting, and [illegible] competition bids fair to be keen, as each is determined to [illegible] as a leading hostess early in the game.

[illegible] Mary Josephine Amory, whose wedding is to take place on [illegible] St. Peter's Church, at Beverly, after her honeymoon will [illegible] North Shore and will without doubt be the leading young [illegible] set, for she has all the charm and accomplishments [illegible] beauty and experience in entertaining, for since her [illegible] has been the head of her father's household.

[illegible] the prospective bridegroom, has spent several seasons on the North [illegible]. He is a Harvard graduate and almost as well known [illegible] prospective bride. They have unlimited means, and [illegible] so popular, without doubt they will be generally recognized [illegible] of the young married set.

* * *

There is [illegible] interesting bride of the North Shore in the person of Mrs. [illegible] of New York. The bride was before her second marriage [illegible] de Streuve of Washington and Russia, and with her [illegible] experience as a hostess her friends are looking to her to be close among the leaders of this interesting little bevy of entertainers. [illegible] she, with her husband, is being entertained by the [illegible] Slaters of Washington, the parents of Mrs. Halsey. Mr. De Streuve died a few years ago. Mrs. Halsey is a sister of Albert Slater, Jr., who married Madeline V. Howe Allen of New Jersey at York Harbor last season. Mr. Slater, Sr., was a brother of the late Mrs. Francis Bartlett of Boston and Pride's Crossing.

Another interesting bride will be Mrs Lydig Hoyt, who before her marriage was Miss Julia Robbins of New York. Their wedding took place in St. George's Church, New York, June 3.

Mr. Hoyt is the son of Mr. and Mrs Gerald Livingston Hoyt of New York, and they and he with his bride have just arrived at Beverly Cove.

The Lancashire family have entered upon their season's stay, after a Winter in Pasadena and several weeks' sojourn in New York. "Graftonwood" possesses, as do all the Dana Beach estates, lavish endowments of ocean and forest scenic grandeur.

Mr and Mrs. Bayard Warren (Elizabeth Sears) went also to Westbury the same day to witness the contests.

* * *

Outing togs are donned [illegible] the Pride's Crossing [illegible] whether the air be chilly or [illegible]amy. * * *

With the arrival of the Fre[illegible] Ayers of Commonwealth avenue, Boston, at their [illegible] estate Avalon [illegible] it is brought to mind that Frederick Ayer, Jr.'s wedding to Miss Hilda Rice of the permanent Ipswich colony will be an August event. The Myopia Hunt Club set will be much in evidence at the wedding, for the Rices, Thomas E. Proctors and the George M[illegible]

* * *

Harold J Coolidge has domiciled his family at Common lane for the season and closed his town house on Berkeley street, Boston. Mrs. Coolidge recently appeared [illegible] the postoffice for [illegible] With her short [illegible]

* * *

Mrs. Willi[illegible] has a pleasant word for her acquaintances among the villagers and seems to enjoy hugely the unrestraint of country life the Beverly shore provides. On one recent late afternoon, Mrs. Loring was noticed on a village walk where she wore an elaborately embroidered, soft, pink, muslin frock, sweater coat and lingerie hat trimmed with leaf green ribbon.

* * *

Boston houses continue to be deserted and the restful charm of Pride's Crossing is accepted willingly as a substitute. The Harcourt Amorys of Beacon street arrived at Wax cottage the early part of the week. The Henry Burnhams have settled at Round Plain Farm, the John Caswell estate. Mrs. George Dexter of Commonwealth avenue has increased the Common lane colony.

* * *

Manchester Welcomes First Diplomats to Arrive

Counsel[illegible] of the Austro-Hungarian embassy, Baron Zwiedinek and Baroness Zwiedinek have arrived at the Brown Mansion, School street. Sir Colville Barclay, charge d'affaires of the English Embassy, and family arrived early in the week at the S. Parker Bremer cottage, Smith's Point.

* * *

The beautiful show place of Smith Point is "Lilliothea," the estate of George R. White of Commonwealth avenue, Boston. Mr. White has bestowed great thought and care and made large expenditures each year upon his Summer home there to reach his ideals of a gentleman's estate. Mr. White was indirectly responsible for improvements to Beach street, Manchester, whereby the town has developed a beautiful parkway along Manchester Creek. [illegible] gives a very artistic approach to Singing Beach and Smith's Point. Mr White started the Beach street improvements at his own expense. In Mr White's family party are Mr. and Mrs. Frederick T. Bradbury (nee White).

* * *

"Clipston," the Smith's Point estate of Boylston A. Beals of Beacon street, Boston, and the Summer home of the John M. Grahams of Commonwealth avenue, Boston, has assumed Summer activities. They are both neighbors of Mr. White.

* * *

Mr. and Mrs. J. Warren Merrill of Boston were early arrivals at "Rockhurst," Smith's Point, while the same portion of Manchester has increased its contingent by the arrival of the Francis M. Stanwoods of Brookline, Mrs. George D. Howe of Commonwealth avenue at "The Cliffs" and Mr. George N. Black of Beacon street at "Craigside."

* * *

Mrs. W. Scott Fitz of Beacon street, Boston, has opened "The Narrows" on Masconomo street. She was expected from the West this week, where she has been sojourning in Arizona. * * *

Dr. L. Vernon Briggs and family of Boston are not expected at Smith's Point this season.

* * *

Mrs. Charles P. Hemenway of Beacon street, Boston, is at her landed estate near Lobster Cove, Smith's Point. Her handsome turnout and livery is already seen each afternoon on the North Shore drives. In the Hemenway family party are the George E. Cabots (Eliza T. Hemenway), at "Ledge Lawn," their cottage on the family estate. Mr and Mrs. Charles W. Traintor (Caroline T. Hemenway), are with Mrs. O. P. Hemenway.

* * *

Mr. and Mrs. Russell S. Codman of Marlboro street, Boston, are enjoying the charms of their artistic concrete home they built at the point a few seasons ago. It is an ideal environment for Mrs. Codman to pursue her literary ambitions. She has already published one successful novel. Mrs Codman inherits her literary gifts from her father, the late Professor Crafts, a noted educator of Boston. The Codmans have had illness in their family circle since they arrived. One of their sons contracted scarlet fever.

* * *

"Singing Dune," which Mr and Mrs. George E. Warren of Boston, have developed and enlarged each season into a very charming estate, lured that family very early in May to the North Shore, as did "Elwood," the lovely Summer habitation of the E. L. Woods of Cypress street, Brookline. Mis Elizabeth C. Wood is very prominent in Massachusetts D. A. R. activities, being regent of Hannah Aspinwall Chapter. This organization enjoys her hospitality at Manchester each season.

* * *

Cobb avenue [illegible] are likewise all open. The Oliver Minks of Marlboro street are domiciled at their Summer home. Mrs.

Fashionable Matrons Migrate to the Seashore

Although [illegible] has been a different [illegible] week, the fashionable matrons have continued to migrate to the seashore. They have cuddled up in fur coats and wrapped their "woolies" more snugly about them and concluded that moth balls will soon become obsolete, if June continues so vacillating, as to extreme temperatures. The thermometer has registered too low also for bathing. Still there is sufficient to occupy "My Lady" in and out of town for several weeks to come to discharge her social obligations.

* * *

The Preston Gibsons of Washington have taken the Storrow cottage on Storrow Hill. They were here a few seasons ago in the Seabury cottage. Beverly Farms society is naturally wondering what entertainments they may give in honor of Mrs. Gibson's titled uncle and aunt, Sir John and Lady Harrington, who are to be at Manchester this Summer with Mrs. James McMillan at "Eagle Head."

* * *

The first wedding of the season in the Summer colony was that solemnized Wednesday at the charming concrete cottage on Hale street of Mr and Mrs. Julius Eisemann of Bay State road, Boston. The contracting parties were Mrs. Eiseman's sister, Miss Edna Wetzler, and S. Stern of New York city. Some five hundred invitations were issued [illegible] reception. The Eisemann's acquired a permanent Summer home at Beverly Farms, adjoining Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes' cottage, a few years ago.

* * *

The Amory Hodges have come on from New York and are again at Fenno cottage. John King Hodges, their son has his name signed to invitations for the Beck Hall spread, Harvard Class Day.

* * *

Mr. and Mrs. Henry L. Mason of Bay State road, Boston, who participate in the civic entertainments in the village in the Winter, have come to their cottage.

* * *

Justice and Mrs. Oliver Wendell Holmes have been delayed and do not arrive for another week. Their household servants are at their cottage.

* * *

Dr and Mrs. Marshall Fabyan of Commonwealth avenue are additional Bostonians who have returned again this season.

Mrs. John Caswell and family will spend the month of June at their Mystery Island cottage. The balance of the season they will be in New Hampshire. The Henry D. Burnhams have the Caswell estate at Pride's this season.

Migratory North Shore Folks Flitting About

The many prominent Bostonians who compose the Hamilton colony are practically all domiciled for the Summer. One meets members of these representative families daily enjoying the sylvan loveliness of this inland section of the North Shore now in its most beautiful dress.

* * *

"Groton House," the imposing estate of Frederick Winthrop of Berkeley street, Boston, has assumed its Summer aspect. It will be recalled that Mr. Winthrop brought Miss Susan B. Thayer of Boston there as a bride a few seasons ago.

* * *

The George Von L. Meyers and the Rudolph L. Agassiz have their estates open. They are very migratory and are flitting about on various out of town trips to weddings and on visits each week.

* * *

* * *

Leonard D. Ahl of Boston and Palm Beach was among the earliest of the season's arrivals. He and his [illegible] (Miss Francis Heaton), formerly of the Beverly Farms colony, are located at "Meadowside."

* * *

"Ashleigh," the Main street estate of Mrs. John C. Walker of Commonwealth avenue, Boston, is open and Mrs. Walker is domiciled for the season. At "Ashleigh" cottage on the estate are also settled Dr. and Mrs. John Jenks Thomas (Frances P. Walker) of Bay State road, Boston.

* * *

Mrs. George D. Sargent of Chestnut Hill avenue, Boston, and the George Burroughs of Hereford street, Boston, have likewise moved down.

* * *

In "The Four Corners" colony are the George S. Mandells of Commonwealth avenue, Boston, and the Charles Fanning Ayers of the same section of Boston.

* * *

Sagamore Farm," the estate of Congressman A. P. Gardner, has been open for a number of weeks.

* * *

Recent Boston dinner hostesses at Hamilton homes were Mrs. Reginald C. Robbins, who entertained at "Lone Tree Farm," with covers for eight, and at "Mostly Hall," the James Howe Procter estate, when Mrs. Procter gave two dinners of sixteen covers each.

* * *

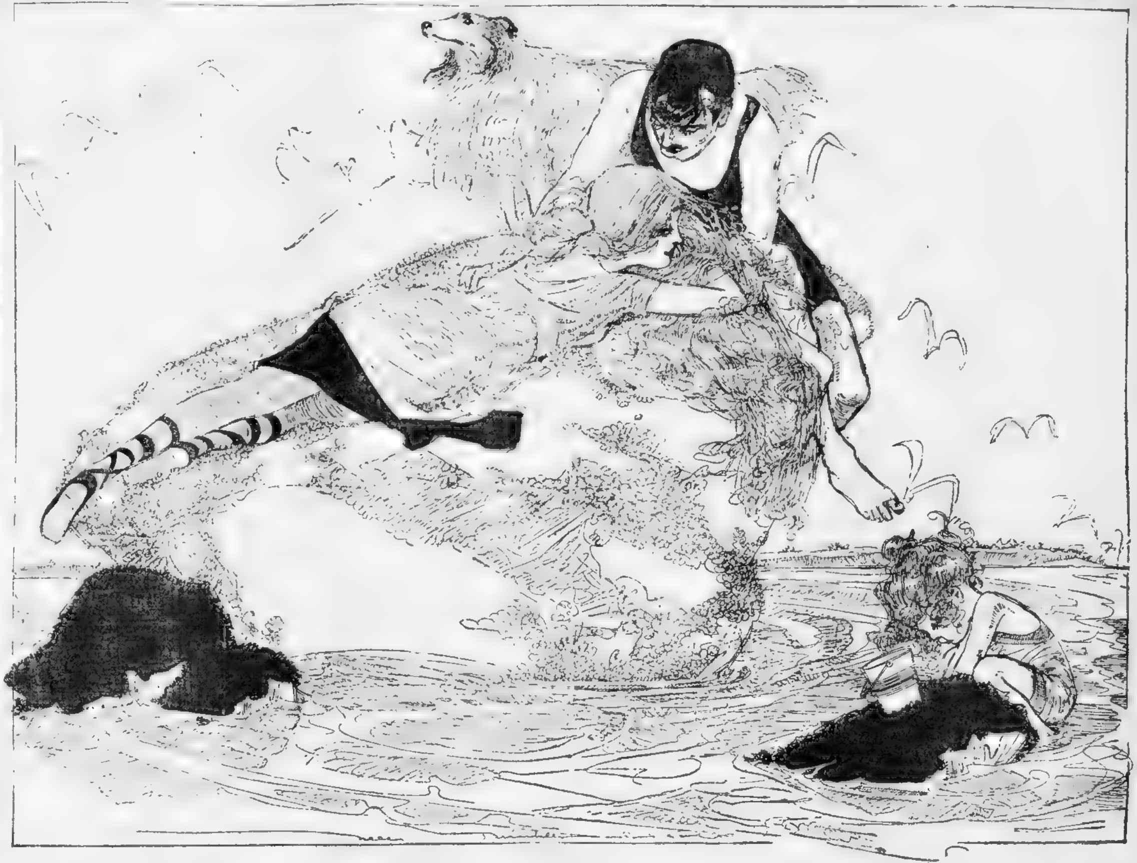
Golden Hours on the Silver Sands of Summer

WHERE CUPID BUILDS CASTLES—DRAWN by NELL BRINKLEY



A GAY salute to our water nymphs!

They are with us once more and in greater abundance than ever. Already the beaches are swarming with these gay creatures full of the lilt and joy of mere living and basking away the golden hours on the sands at the brink of old Ocean.

But the dip, the swim and the tango all are sandwiched in between these hours just lazed away when dreams of the past Winter and its conquests and also dreams of what may come of some of the budding romances keep the brain stirring merrily to the accompaniment of joyous heart beats.

Everything seems to breathe of joy; and blending with the zest of the present happiness is the joy of the prospect ahead, for it certainly is to be one grand, gay Summer.

Already the Summer suns and sea winds seem to be working their witchery, and the wine of life is fairly dancing through the veins of the countless pleasure seekers who throng New England's coast.

The bare sands of beach and harbor have blossomed into tropical kaleidoscopic gardens of color and life, and mid-June, with hints of the gayeties ahead, is bringing to its fulness the charm of it all, and society en masse moves about with prismatic shimmer.

Already the sea sings of the romances to begin and ripen along her shores, and already each young aristocrat has made up his mind as to just which of the dazzling array of girls who surround him he's going to choose for his Summer pal—and perhaps his Winter one.

Already there's just the one girl he likes best to sit with on the sands, and while they talk of all the various things which interest them both and she lets the warm sands sift through her dainty fingers they realize how very congenial they are, and little Danny Cupid shovels another lot of sand in his pail and pats it gleefully.

Romance! There's little but romance these days at the shore, and while the young are in the thick of it the older members are given food for thought and conversation.

The ceremony took place at the Stoughton Street Baptist Church, Dorchester, and was followed by a reception in the church parlors. The bride's gown was of white embroidered Japanese crepe over white satin and her bouquet was of valley [illegible].

Miss Edith Hebblethwaite, of [illegible]chester, was her bridesmaid and Miss Irma G. Townsend, sister of the bride, was maid of honor.

Ralph J. Hinkley, of Dorchester, was best man, and the ushers were Harry Belt, Henry W. W. Jenks, Oscar R. Sweet, C. Carey Winchester of Dorchester, and E. Payson Upham, Jr., of West Newton.

[illegible] night was a gala night at the Brae Burn Country Club in West Newton, when the first al fresco affair of the season was given and dancing was enjoyed on the spacious lawns.

The night was ideal for the affair and with the soft music, the subdued lights and filmy gowns of the women the scene was actually like fairy land. The affair was known as a dinner dansant, and all the latest steps were done by the dancers.

A dinner served to 300 guests preceded the dancing, and before the dancing had proceeded far the number had been swollen to 2,000.

Among the hosts and hostesses were Harry L. Ayer, the instigator of the affair; Mrs. W. H. Lucas, W. E. Jones, Mrs Francis E. Stanley, Prescott Warren, A. L. Sallinger, W. S. B. Stevens, Ho[illegible] Emerson, R. O. Lamb, H. [illegible] Morse, R. W. Newell, Harold O. Whitney, Miss Ethel F. Levi, Isaac B. North, Harry L. Burrage, Edward F. Woods, T. B. Munroe, F. F. Raymond, A. C. Gould, Renton Whidden, W. Kirk Corey, H. P. Bradford, Mrs. Arthur Foote, Dr. George H. Talbot, Zenas Sears, E. N. Kimball, J. Howard Duer, George B. H. Macomber, Ernest Lovejoy, J. H. McNeil, William C. Cook, H. D. Corey and Frank L. Richardson.

It seems to me that the fads for jewelry are fast increasing among the smart set this Summer, and it seems to run to watches, as far as I can see. For instance, Mrs. J. Cameron Bradley—she who was formerly Miss Helen Sears—has one of the most beautiful conceits that one can imagine which she got in Paris. It is in the shape of a tiny square buckle attached to a narrow band of black moire ribbon and worn as a wrist watch. The face of the dial is of platinum and the hands are of dull gold, while the entire affair is surrounded by tiny diamonds forming a square jeweled timepiece about an inch square.

Miss Dorothy Jordan, who is more on the practical lines, is devoted to the more useful form of a timepiece as she is never without a stunning tiny gold wrist watch which has the diminutive gold hands with the small blue enamel figures on it. This is worn fastened with a narrow band of black leather from a small gold wire at either side of the timepiece.

Miss Priscilla May of the Vincent Club, who is interested in the same sort of jewelry, wears a most stunning watch in the form of a small jeweled ball in enamel in the shades of gray which strongly resemble the platinum coloring. It is suspended from a tiny gold and platinum chain. The dial is scarcely a quarter of an inch in circumference and the hands are so small it is hard to distinguish the time without the closest inspection.

Mrs. I. Tucker Burr, Jr.—she was formerly Miss Evelyn Thayer and a bride of last fall—shows excellent taste in a jeweled watch which was the gift of Mr. Burr. It is suspended from a tiny gold chain and has the figures in gold on a dial of dark red enamel. The timepiece is surrounded by small diamonds.

A reception which took place at the College Club on Commonwealth avenue on Thursday afternoon called out a large and representative set of people to bid Mrs. Baldwin goodby. She leaves for New York very shortly with her husband, Professor Baldwin of Harvard, who enters upon his new duties there, and will be greatly missed here in consequence.

Among the ladies who poured was Mrs. Albert L. Pillsbury of Bay State road, wife of the former Attorney-General, who looked especially well in an imported creation of French blue crepe de chine in brocaded effect which had a deep tunic of the same shade of blue with the conventional autumnal shades of foliage done in the dull reds and brownish yellow tints. Two large tassels in the same shading finish the tunic at the back. The sleeves are diaphanous in the deepest shade of blue chiffon and fastened at the wrists by tiny bows of dulled velvet. The capote to match it is a round dressed straw in dark blue trimmed in a band of small pink roses, and between each bloom is a miniature sheaf of wheat. A white lace embroidered veil completes a very chic costume.

Mrs. Henry S. Dickinson of Beacon street, Brookline, has only just returned from Springfield after visiting the relatives of her late husband, the former Mayor of Springfield. I happened to see Mrs. Dickinson the other afternoon coming out of the Copley-Plaza. She looked especially pretty in a creation of black taffeta which was trimmed in maline in the old-fashioned effect so much in vogue now. The tunic was finished in this material, while the sleeves were of the transparent material finished in a tiny bow of black velvet and the bodice in surplice effect edged in white mulle. Her hat was a low crown one in black straw which had a wreath of dull [illegible] velvet rose with their foliage.

SQUANTUMPEOPLERATHER ROUGH ABOUT IT, IT SEEMS

[illegible] up [illegible] wee small hours of the morning [illegible] his, or her, [illegible] its clarion notes. Then swat—a dead mosquito—But down in Squantum, Greater Boston's Summer resort [illegible], five miles from the State House, they are going to sing to the mosquito [illegible] the Colonel Gorgas [illegible] (canal fame) method of exterminating them by the use of oil.

Last year Squantum was as near mosquitoless as any place in Massachusetts. This was because the local improvement association passed the hats and got funds enough to buy oil and sprayed all the stagnant pools of that section which were breeding places for the pests.

This year they have gone one better. They are going to sing and dance to the mosquito and then put him to death. To raise the funds this year the Squantum Improvement Association is giving a minstrel show. It will be at the Squantum Inn on Tuesday night, June 16, and Wednesday night, June 17. It is expected that over $75 will be raised and a large part of this will go to buy oil with which to spray pools and stagnant water and to hiring this work done.

A very attractive program for this show has been arranged. For two months rehearsals have been going on under the direction of Charles S. Bostwick, the musical director of the show. The program of the opening part will be: Overture, opening chorus, "The Minstrel's delight;" "I Love the Ladies," James [illegible]; "A Little Love, A Little Kiss," [illegible] S. Purcell; "All Aboard [illegible] Dixieland," David Olson; "Where the [illegible] Red Roses Grow," Master Frederick E. Be[illegible]; "Constantly," Charles S. Boston Catholic Circles Stormed with Brilliant Flurry of June Brides

Brides—charming, winsome, sweet, demure; exhaust the supply of adjectives as you will, and even then you will not have done them justice—have veritably overwhelmed Boston and suburban social circles the past week.

And the end of the long list is not yet—for the calendar for the coming days of June is crowded with wedding dates.

Catholic circles have been especially busy with the doings of little Danny Cupid the past few days, as, to wit, the following will indicate:

F. J. MURRAY AND BRIDE OFF TO WHITE MTS.

One of the many charming June brides was Miss M. Ruth Romer, who became the bride of Francis J. Murray, a prominent Boston lawyer, Wednesday morning in St. Mark's Church, Dorchester. She is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Edward Romer of Dorchester.

The marriage took place at a nuptial mass which was solemnized by Rev. John A. Daly, pastor of St. Mark's Church.

The bride looked beautiful in gown of duchess satin with lace. Her full court train extended from the shoulders. Her tulle veil was edged with duchess lace and was coroneted with a wreath of orange blossoms. She caried a shower bouquet of lilies of the valley and orchids.

The bride was attended by her sister, Miss Charotte Romer, who was maid of honor. She wore a gown of yellow charmeuse, trimmed with rose point lace. She wore a watteau hat of lace, banked with yellow plumes. She caried a bouquet of yellow tea roses.

George H. Spillane of Chelsea was best man, while the ushers included Daniel W. Flynn and Edward W. Romer, brother of the bride.

Miss Ethel Ormsby was organist.

Following the ceremony a reception was held at the home of the bride's parents, on King street, Dorchester. After a long honeymoon in the White Mountains the young couple will be at home to their friends after the first of September at No. 28 Columbia road, Dorchester.

MISS MARY E. HERRICK A. F. HARRINGTON'S BRIDE

One of the pretty weddings of the week was that of Miss Mary E. Herrick of Dorchester to Alonzo F. Harrington. The marriage took place at a nuptial mass, which was solemnized by Rev. John Fletcher, assisted by Rev. Philip J. Mullen of Philadelphia in St. William's Church, Dorchester, Tuesday morning.

The bride looked charming in gown of white satin en traine with tunic and scaffings of rose point lace. Her tulle veil was wreathed in orange blossoms. She carried a shower bouquet of lilies of the valley.

Miss Lucy A. Herrick, sister of the bride, looked winsome in gown of rose pink taffeta and rose point lace bodice. Soft folds of crepe meteor edged the bottom of the gown. She wore a leghorn sailor, wreathed in rose-hued roses. Black velvet streamers extended from the hat over the shoulder. She carried a sheaf of roses.

Dainty Miss Mary Gertrude Herrick of Fall River, niece of the bride, was the flower girl. She looked very sweet in gown of white embroidered French batiste, scaffed in pink satin. She carried a basket of pink sweet peas.

The groom was attended by his brother, Dr. Daniel J. Harrington.

Miss Emma Murphy was organist, while Miss Katherine Towle of Charlestown was soloist, singing the Ave Marie during the mass and the Rosary after the services.

Following the marriage ceremony a wedding breakfast was served at the home of the bride, Victoria street, to the relatives and friends of the couple.

To the sweetly played wedding march of Lohengrin's played by the organist, John P. Hession, the bridal party marched down the centre aisle of the church, where the bride was given in marriage by her father.

The bride looked very winsome in gown of ivory white satin, with flounces of the same material, and full court train. The bodice was drapped in point applique lace as well as the tunic. Her tulle veil was caught to the coiffure by a wreath of orange blossoms. She carried shower bouquet of lilies and white orchids.

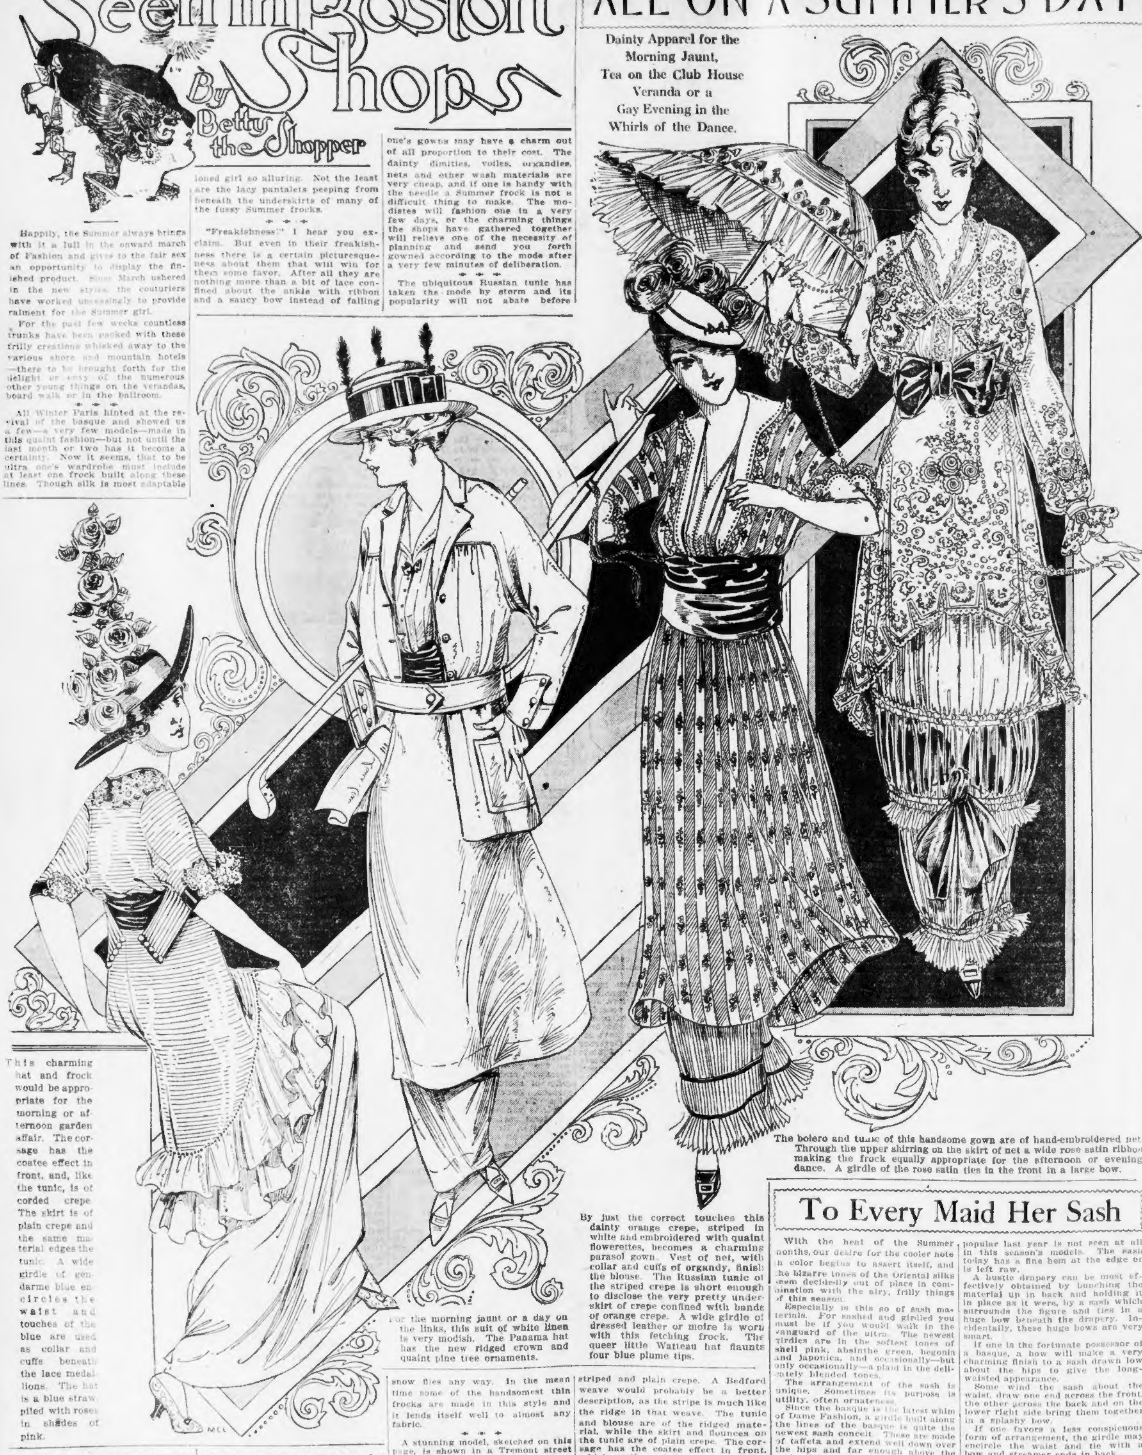
Seen in Boston Shops

By Betty the Shopper



Happily, the Summer always brings with it a lull in the onward march of Fashion and gives to the fair sex an opportunity to display the finished product. Since March ushered in the new styles the couturiers have worked unceasingly to provide raiment for the Summer girl.

For the past few weeks countless trunks have been packed with these frilly creations whisked away to the various shore and mountain hotels—there to be brought forth for the delight or envy of the numerous other young things on the verandas, board walk or in the ballroom.

◆ ◆ ◆

All Winter Paris hinted at the revival of the basque and showed us a few—a very few models—made in this quaint fashion—but not until the last month or two has it become a certainty. Now it seems, that to be ultra one's wardrobe must include at least one frock built along these lines. Though silk is most adaptable to this style, the makers of Milady's gowns have not been dismayed, and voiles, organdies and chiffon cloth have been cleverly arranged to give her the lines of her sister of the eighties.

◆ ◆ ◆

Undoubtedly, many of the Fall tailleur suits will have coats of the basque variety. Though they give almost the same fitted look, the old fashioned basque seams are not used very extensively. The French seam takes the place of the dart and a centre seam often in the form of a plait is laid in the back. The sleeves may be set in or kimono, but in either case are very tight from the shoulder to the wrist. A very modish touch is given to these garments by the winged collars of organdy or some white material used to top them off.

◆ ◆ ◆

And the basque is not the only feature that takes us on a jaunt through the past. The lass of today shares with the coy maiden of the thirties and sixties several frilly adornments that made the old-fashioned girl so alluring. Not the least are the lacy pantalets peeping from beneath the underskirts of many of the fussy Summer frocks.

◆ ◆ ◆

"Freakishness!" I hear you exclaim. But even in their freakishness there is a certain picturesqueness about them that will win for them some favor. After all they are nothing more than a bit of lace confined about the ankle with ribbon and a saucy bow instead of falling about the feet in the manner of a very proper petticoat.

◆ ◆ ◆

The radical difference between the maid of yesteryear and the Summer girl of 1914 is in the width of their respective skirts at the hem. This season's frills stand forth from the hips in a very independent fashion, but they lose their width as they reach the ground, and in spite of the few flaring skirts that have been launched, they continue to be very narrow about the feet.

◆ ◆ ◆

In the Summer wraps we see the revival of the voluminous mantle of our grandmother's day, with the addition of the very modern Japanese collar. This rests lightly on the shoulders without a thought to the fit and adds to the nonchalant air affected by the modish woman of today.

◆ ◆ ◆

The Summer clothes, as befits the season, should be light, airy and as frilly as one's purse and build will permit. And apropos of the purse. This is one season of the year when one's gowns may have a charm out of all proportion to their cost. The dainty dimities, voiles, organdies, nets and other wash materials are very cheap, and if one is handy with the needle a Summer frock is not a difficult thing to make. The modistes will fashion one in a very few days, or the charming things the shops have gathered together will relieve one of the necessity of planning and send you forth gowned according to the mode after a very few minutes of deliberation.

◆ ◆ ◆

The ubiquitous Russian tunic has taken the mode by storm and its popularity will not abate before snow flies any way. In the mean time some of the handsomest thin frocks are made in this style and it lends itself well to almost any fabric.

◆ ◆ ◆

A stunning model, sketched on this page, is shown in a Tremont street shop. The material is orange crepe, striped broadly with white. At regular intervals in the stripe are the daintiest little flowers, combining several colors in the petals and leaves. The long tunic falls to within a few inches of the feet, where it discloses a fetching petticoat of white crepe held in about the ankles with bands of orange crepe. The corsage is an extreme blouse, with a dainty vest, cuffs and the fashionable winged collar. A wide girdle of patent leather completes this most effective costume for the Summer afternoon fete or the promenade.

◆ ◆ ◆

Though organdie and other sheer materials are popular for the Summer frock, crepe seems to hold the place pre-eminent. The manufacturers have been so successful in the printing and coloring of this material that one can get almost any shade or design that she wishes. The flowered patterns are most attractive, as are also the crepes with a design or stripe woven in.

◆ ◆ ◆

A Winter street shop is showing a dainty little gown—a combination of striped and plain crepe. A Bedford weave would probably be a better description, as the stripe is much like the ridge in that weave. The tunic and blouse are of the ridged material, while the skirt and flounces on the tunic are of plain crepe. The corsage has the coatee effect in front, which continues into two wide bands across the hips and toward the back, where they are edged with pearl beads. A wide ribbon of gendarme blue forms the girdle, and touches of the blue are used on the collar and cuffs under the medallions of lace.

◆ ◆ ◆

Where formerly the feminine world was content to possess one or two frocks in a season, the tango rage has made this the most important item in miladi's wardrobe, and to counteract the wear and tear she must change them often. In the early days of the dancing craze many attempted to use the same gown some time for their nightly "dip and hesitate," only to come home in rags and tatters, with a beautiful gown in ruins. Now the slogan is "quantity more than quality," with a happier result to all concerned.

◆ ◆ ◆

Fortunately, the Summer frock that is appropriate for the afternoon function may be worn also at the evening dance. The very loveliest of these little tea or dance frocks are of lace or net, and nothing could be more suggestive of Summer.

ALL ON A SUMMER'S DAY

Dainty Apparel for the Morning Jaunt,
Tea on the Club House
Veranda or a Gay Evening in the Whirls of the Dance.

This charming hat and frock would be appropriate for the morning or afternoon garden affair. The corsage has the coatee effect in front, and, like the tunic, is of corded crepe. The skirt is of plain crepe and the same material edges the tunic. A wide girdle of gendarme blue encircles the waist and touches of the blue are used as collar and cuffs beneath the lace medallions. The hat is a blue straw, piled with roses in shades of pink.

For the morning jaunt or a day on the links, this suit of white linen is very modish. The Panama hat has the new ridged crown and quaint pine tree ornaments.

By just the correct touches this dainty orange crepe, striped in white and embroidered with quaint flowerettes, becomes a charming parasol gown. Vest of net, with collar and cuffs of organdy, finish the blouse. The Russian tunic of the striped crepe is short enough to disclose the very pretty underskirt of crepe confined with bands of orange crepe. A wide girdle of dressed leather or moire is worn with this fetching frock. The queer little Watteau hat flaunts four blue plume tips.

The bolero and tunic of this handsome gown are of hand-embroidered net. Through the upper shirring on the skirt of net a wide rose satin ribbon making the frock equally appropriate for the afternoon or evening dance. A girdle of the rose satin ties in the front in a large bow.

To Every Maid Her Sash

With the heat of the Summer months, our desire for the cooler note in color begins to assert itself, and the bizarre tones of the Oriental silks seem decidedly out of place in combination with the airy, frilly things of this season.

Especially is this so of sash materials. For sashed and girdled you must be if you would walk in the vanguard of the ultra. The newest girdles are in the softest tones of shell pink, absinthe green, begonia and japonica, and occasionally—but only occasionally—a plaid in the delicately blended tones.

Since the basque is the latest whim of Dame Fashion, a girdle built along the lines of the basque is quite the newest sash conceit. These are made of taffeta and extend well down over the hips and far enough above the waist line to give the fitted look. Some are made of the silk in straight pieces, but more often the material is draped after the manner of the old-fashioned basque.

The fringed sash which was so popular last year is not seen at all in this season's models. The sash today has a fine hem at the edge or is left raw.

A bustle drapery can be most effectively obtained by bunching the material up in back and holding it in place as it were, by a sash which surrounds the figure and ties in a huge bow beneath the drapery. Incidentally, these huge bows are very smart.

If one is the fortunate possessor of a basque, a bow will make a very charming finish to a sash drawn low about the hips to give the long-waisted appearance.

Some wind the sash about the waist, draw one end across the front, the other across the back and on the lower right side bring them together in a splashy bow.

If one favors a less conspicuous form of arrangement, the girdle may encircle the waist and tie with a bow and streamer ends in back.

Drawing the sash once round the waist from the back, crossing it and continuing it to the back again, where one end is looped loosely over the other, is a pretty fashion of the Winter which has survived.

Timely Hints from Paris

Many of the white taffeta dancing frocks are girdled with handsome brocaded ribbons in different colors, such as navy blue brocaded in large silver leaves.

Scarfs are still much used; thin, filmy things in white or colored tulle, or in cream applique lace. For evening wraps, the military capes in black satin lined with delicate Roman striped silks, or with black chiffon, are paramount. They are particularly becoming made with high Directoire collars of black velvet.

The artificial flower is again noticed, usually in the form of a small pink rose or an American Beauty bud. These are worn on all gowns of all colors for all occasions. Eve Lavalliere wears one in deep pink on an emerald green taffeta frock. Premet shows them on pastel shades of blue and Cheruit with white. They are also used in wreaths as coiffure ornaments for the hair. This latter use is less successful, though the Comtesse Vigier at the theatre the other night looked very charming with her hair coiffed high and encircled by a garland of roses.

For the Summer frock the mode of the short skirt and the transparent waist is delicious, though, strictly speaking, the lingerie gown as we know it has small place in the wardrobe of a true Parisian.

For Milady's Wardrobe

Plain black silk braid is very smart on costumes of blue serge or gabardine. Coats and blouses are bound with wide bands of it and it is sewn flat on the edges of tunics.

◆ ◆ ◆

The lover of the chic has again adopted the hat with strings. Small hats boast them, and the adorable little lingerie and straw combinations are made more charming by the addition of the bridle.

◆ ◆ ◆

The fitted bodice which fastens straight down the front is being adopted with alacrity by the Parisian couturiers.

◆ ◆ ◆

Tunics and corsages of embroidered nets are worn over finely plaited skirts of soft silk, satin or chiffon.

◆ ◆ ◆

Very attractive morning frocks are fashioned from gingham in pink, blue or buff.

◆ ◆ ◆

The bustle puff has ceased to be a novelty and is accepted for at least one of Madame's frocks in her Summer wardrobe.

◆ ◆ ◆

The all white hat is in the limelight just now. It is made of fine Belgian straw and is trimmed with either wings or cherries, all a dead white.

◆ ◆ ◆

Many of the smartest hats for afternoon or evening wear are made with the crown of transparent tulle, allowing the hair to be seen.

◆ ◆ ◆

Lacquered ribbon began its very popular season by appearing on the hat, but is now largely used as trimming for the gown or coat. Since it has the appearance of varnished leather, it gives a smart finish to dark cloth.

◆ ◆ ◆

The white ribbed materials a smarter for the separate skirt th season than the plain linens ratines.

◆ ◆ ◆

◆ ◆ ◆

Ball buttons of taffeta are used on taffeta frocks. Buttons of jet, cut steel and porcelain are also very popular, quite supplanting the crystal buttons.

◆ ◆ ◆

The very smartest parasols are of odd shapes. The Mandarin is a great favorite, while the dome-shaped shade, edged with a fluting, is very much in vogue.

◆ ◆ ◆

Though it seems an odd combination, chiffon and handkerchief linen is shown in many of the newer blouses. A touch of taffeta on the collar, or taffeta buttons, would make such a blouse very appropriate for wear with the separate skirt of taffeta.

◆ ◆ ◆

The ultra smart woman has her assortment of walking sticks, the equal of any of her male friends. Her's are usually more ornate than those carried by the masculine element, but they are as sturdy, and built for use. The very latest for dress affairs is a cane of white with an amethyst in the head and a white silk cord to attach it to the wrist.

Boston's Peach Crop Loveliest on Record

IF YOU DON'T BELIEVE IT JUST WALK DOWN TREMONT STREET

And if You Do Not Sit Up and Take Notice, It Is a Sign That Father Time Has Marked Your Ticket for the Old Fogy Class.

DON'T BE AN OLD FOGY

Having given the matter the most minute attention, one is glad to be able to rise, before this convention of the people today, and report that the Boston peach crop is the loveliest on record.

The "Boston" peach crop?

Girls!

Yes-sir-ree, Bob, one has never gazed upon a collection of youth, and grace, and beauty, to compare with this.

Such girls!

Man alive, as you look these lovely damosels over, a feeling of pity starts, down around your heart somewhere, and comes bubbling up until it almost chokes you.

Pity?

Uh-huh, p-i-t-y.

Pity for all those fine old laddybucks one finds mentioned on history's pages—"you know what I mean."

Alexander, Caesar, Tom Heenan, George Washington, Richard III., Croesus, Damon and Pythias.

If you had your choice—of course you understand you HAVEN'T got your choice, but just supposin'—which would you "drather"? Would you swap YOUR chance to walk through Tremont street along about 3 o'clock or 5 o'clock in the afternoon for the niche occupied by any one of these gents in the Hall of Fame?

Certainly not!

Jee whiz, just to look them over, these beautiful Boston girls—from Lynn, West Roxbury, Hyde Park, Bunker Hill street, Wollaston, Cambridge, Brookline, Meeting House Hill and the way stations—just to look them over is enough to bring back your youth, tone up the system and make a new man of you.

It is a Spring tonic. That's what! A regular Spring tonic.

And, while we are considering this phase of the day's business, may it not be well and proper to inquire the name, and the address, of the jokesmith who started that slander about the Boston's girl's "coldness."

The man had never been in Boston in his life!

One is almost tempted to say—having several times recently given the Boston peach crop the once-over—that there is not now, and there never was, a cold Boston girl.

One is tempted, that is to say, but one resists and one overcomes the temptation.

There IS a cold Boston girl.

You will find her in one of the luncheon rooms patronized by the youth and the elite of Boston's business and financial world.

Admission to her small and select counter is by card only.

Butt in at thy peril, brother.

Having groped in, under the impression that this is a regular luncheon place, and having found thy way to the stall of this icy Minerva under the impression that the game is "open," thee sits around for an hour listening to Minerva's chat with Reginald, blonde heir of the Multymills, or dashing Derrick, the million-dollar infant.

It may be that—anon—Minerva's eye will fall upon THEE.

Poor worm.

Bounders have been known to turn into stone at one such glance.

This marble-hearted person of the noon-day luncheon, however, is merely the exception which proves the rule.

And the rule is that Boston girls are at once the best looking, the loveliest and the warmest-hearted in all the world.

And of all the girls within the Metropolitan district, which are the loveliest?

Men who pretend to know about such things declare that, far and away, the loveliest variety in the Boston peach garden is the stenografia peacherino.

Uh-huh, the stenographer.

Nine out of ten male visitors to Boston think they have seen the "typical Back Bay girl" when they have looked upon the typical Boston stenographer.

Which is very much to the advantage of the typical Back Bay maiden.

And—they say—the Boston stenographer is:

Dressed in excellent taste.
Demure.
Very good looking.
A little lady.

Artist Roth is an artist. He made this picture out of his own head. He did not accompany the present investigator, who has been making careful study of the subject for nearly thirty-five years and who finds that they are today making 'em more beautiful than ever.

If the investigator could draw a picture, to go with the "story," the picture would be of one of these little ones in black and white, with a collar and vest like those worn by the end men in the old-time minstrel first part. Then top them off with a dwarf of a hat that looks as if most of it is missing.

But, the point is, the 1914 girl crop is big and blooming and beauteous, and if you do not sit up, Mister, and take notice, it is merely another sign that Father Time has marked your ticket for the Old Fogy class.

Don't be an Old Fogy!
